eign manufacturer by preventing him from carrying on wholesale production; it made production more expensive; in many cases it could not be done at all without defacing or ruining the goods. But is was fine Protection.

"The Opposition fought this vigorously in the House; but in vain. Mr. Wigmore, of course, had not much to say; he probably had very little idea what they were talking about; but Sir Henry Drayton defended it as instructed and the Government put it through. There then arose such a protest from importers that the situation became serious (politically). The Montreal Gazette, the leading government organ in Canada, which has shown repeatedly that it is always torn between its loyalty to Tory ism and its despair with the Meighen government, made it so uncomfortable for the government that when Mr. Baxter succeeded Mr. Wigmore he promised that "something would be done." Meanwhile, it remains; and numerous Montreal and other importers declare that it is last straw in the way of incompetent administration which has broken the back of their loyalty to the government.

"This is only one out of many examples of what happens to an administration which attempts to carry on government after it has lost the confidence."
