THE MURDERER OF MONACO.

BY LEO TOLSTOI.

There is a little kingdom on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea, between France and Italy. The name of the kingdom is Monaco. Its population is smaller than that of a big village, amounting to about 7,000 people, and there is not even as much as an acre of land to a soul. But there is a real kinglet in their little kingdom by the sea; and the kinglet has everything—a palace, a court, ministers, archbishops, generals, and also an army. Not a big army, just sixty men, but an army, nevertheless. The kinglet's income is very insignificant. To be sure, there is a tax on tobacco, on wine, and on brandy, as everything else, and the people there drink and smoke, yet there is no small that the kinglet would not have enough to support himself, his court, and his officials, if he did not have a special source of income. The special income is from the gambling establishment in his kingdom—dom from roulette. People gamble, lose or win, and the proprietor gains all the time. And out of these gains the proprietor pays the kinglet big sums of money, because this is the only gambling establishment that remains in Europe. Before there used to be such gambling establishments in the domain of each of the German princes, and they were prohibited some time ago. The reason why they were prohibited was that they used to bring about many disagreeable consequences. Some one would come there to gamble, would lose everything—his own and some-times other people's money as well—and then he would either drown or shoot himself for grief. The Germans prohibited this in the domain of their princes, but in Monaco, so it remains there.

One day, about five years ago, a murder took place in the land of the kinglet. The people of that kingdom are a peaceful lot, and such a thing never happened there before. The judges assembled, investigated, tried the case, there were judges, prosecutors, and jurymen, and lawyers. They tried the case and condemned the man to capital punishment—to death by the guillotine. Very well. The decree was presented to the kinglet. The kinglet read the sentence and confirmed it. The murderer should be put to death. But there was a trouble—the kingdom had neither the guillotine nor the executioner to behead the criminal.

The ministers began to think what to do and they soon decided to inquire of the French government whether it could furnish for a certain time the necessary machine and executioner to behead a criminal, and how much the thing would cost. A letter was forwarded to the French government. In a week they received an answer, saying that the machine and the executioner could be had for the sum of 15,000 francs. This was reported to the kinglet. The kinglet thought the matter over, considered it carefully. Sixteen thousand francs!

At the meeting it was decided to write to the king of Italy. The French government was a republic; it had no respect for kings; but the king of Italy was, after all, one of their own. He might, therefore, quote a lower rate. The letter was forwarded, and an answer came immediately. The Italian government wrote that it would send both the machine and the executioner with pleasure, and that it would cost in all 15,000 francs. The kinglet again meant to assess the people a little less than two francs each.

Again a session was held. The ministers thought, considered the matter carefully. Perhaps it would be done in a less expensive way. Perhaps some of the soldiers would undertake to behead the murderer. A general was summoned.

"Isn't there a soldier in your army who would cut a rascal's head off?" he was asked. "Any way they are supposed to kill people in time of war! That's what a soldier is trained for!" The general's sole to the soldiers, but some of them would undertake to do it. "No," they said, "we can't do this, nor were we taught to do it." "What was to be done? Again they thought and thought, called special sessions, committees, commissions. Then they changed their minds, and decided to behead the murderer by the guillotine. The king would thus show his mercy, and at the same time the expense would not be so large. The king was satisfied and the matter was settled. But there was another trouble—there was no guillotine in the land, where the guillotine might be kept for a lifetime. There were some small rooms where prisoners were held for a short time, but there was no solid prison to keep one forever. A place was found in the end. A guard was stationed to watch him.

The guard watched him and used to go to the kitchen of the kinglet to get food for the prisoner. The fellow was there six months a year.

At the end of the year the kinglet began to go over his accounts, and noticed a new expense; and not a small expense it was that went to maintain the prisoner. A special guard and food! It cost him six hundred francs during the year. And the fellow was young, healthy; he would live another fifty years. Just think of how much that would amount to! Too expensive. It could not remain so. The kinglet summoned the ministers and told them: "Think of some plan whereby we can punish that rascal more cheaply. He costs us entirely too much." The ministers assembled and cogitated their heads over the matter. One of them said: "I believe it were a good idea to discharge the guard." Said another: "But the prisoner would run away!" "Let him go!" said the first.

This was reported to the king. He, too, was satisfied. The guard was discharged. Now they wondered what the prisoner would do. They saw that when the dinner hour arrived the criminal came out, looked around for the guard, and not finding him, went to the kitchen of the king to get something to eat. He took everything that gave him there, went back to prison, closed the door behind him, and stayed there. He went for his food, came back—but did not go away.

"What now? Again they thought. 'Let us rather tell him plainly,' they said, 'that we don't want him there any longer. Let him go!'"

Very well. The minister of justice summoned the prisoner and said to him: "Why don't you go away? There is no one to watch you there. You may freely leave the prison, and the king won't feel insulted."

The king wouldn't feel insulted, but I have no place to go. Where shall I go? You have disgraced me by the sentence; nobody will have anything to do with me now; I am retired from everything now. You did not treat me properly. It was wrong to act so. You condemned me to capital punishment. Very well. You should have killed me—but you didn't. That is first. Then you sentenced me to life imprisonment for life, and put a guard to bring me food. Then you removed the guard. That is second. Still I was satisfied—I didn't protest. I went for food myself. Now you tell me, 'Go!' No, you may say what you please, I will not go anywhere."

Again a meeting was called. What was to be done? He would not go away. They thought and thought. "We must allow him a pension," they finally decided. "Without this you cannot get rid of him." This was reported to the king.

"We cannot help it," he said; "we must get rid of him in some way." They allowed the prisoner 600 francs a year and notified him of their decision.

"Well," he said, "if you promise to pay me regularly I will go." It was decided. He received 500 francs in advance, bid them all goodby and left the domain of the kinglet. He settled down somewhere in the neighborhood, bought some land, began to cultivate a vegetable garden, and lived in clover.

GOLF.

WORLD'S RECORD DRIVE.

(New York Sun.)

A drive that is a new record in golf was made on Saturday by Walter J. Travis from the eighth tee at the Garden City Golf Club links, during a three-some with the well-known amateurs the Price of Tuxedo and Arden M. Robbins of St. Andrews. The drive was of 382 yards. The ground was frozen and free from snow or ice, and there was a following wind.

"I somehow managed to get off an astonishing long ball," said Travis, in telling of the feat. "The drive was from the eighth tee to the road in front of the green, 382 yards in all. The actual distance of the hole is 408 yards. The going is practically level, a shade up grade if anything, for some 360 yards, then there is a gentle slope to the road of some fifteen yards. So far as I know this is the longest ball ever driven on this or any other hole on the course."

The hole is recognized as a hard par 4, for after the second shot the players are more often in the road than on the green. Under the scale adopted on Wednesday by the New Jersey State Golf Association, the par would be 4-1-2.

Canadian Team Continue Its Silly Show in England.
TORONTO, Jan. 25.—The Telegram's cable from the All-Canada played a draw with the United Service Club at Portsmouth today in the presence of about a thousand spectators. The United Service team was fairly good. The Portsmouth players thought the game very tame and considered the United Service team had an easy thing. Some of the spectators left at half time disgusted. The United Service themselves expected to defeat the Portsmouth team very easily, but the game was very evenly matched, as the United Service men had only played one or two games together. The Canadian forward line passed every time. While there were no brilliant plays, the game was fast and open throughout. Scoring as full back saved cleverly twice. Scoring got going once, but was touched just when serving. The game all together was interesting and exciting, but the opinion was generally expressed that the Canada should have scored a try, but the passing and tackling of the United Service men saved them.
