

FORMER NURSE HAS FULLY RECOVERED

"Can Never Express My Gratitude for What Tanlac Did for My Wife," Says Husband—Never Felt Better in Life.

Mr. Morris, 277 University St., Montreal, P. Q., sergeant in the Canadian army during the late World War, and whose wife accompanied him overseas as a trained nurse, comes forward with an interesting statement regarding the recovery of his wife, Mrs. Morris, after she had been suffering from a severe case of neuritis for several years.

the telephone would upset her completely, and it was impossible for her to get a good night's sleep. "She became very weak and run down, and in fact, not even the fatigue and hardships she endured as an army nurse caused her anything like the suffering this trouble did. We tried a number of different medicines from time to time, but nothing helped her until she got Tanlac.

Working Men Exhibit Pictures

English Postman and Milkman Have Canvasses at Toynbee Art Club.

By MARK ZANGWILL.
(Copyright, 1920, by Cross-Atlantic)
London, Nov. 2.—The policeman painter—he was never a Sergeant, though he may claim to be a Constable—is not unknown. He has even penetrated the sacred portals in Piccadilly and managed to get a picture hung at Burlington House. This was only justice. The postman, too, though more properly a man of letters has not knocked at the doors of the Royal Academy in vain. And now at the Whitechapel Art Club, which has done much to develop the artistic conception of the Eastender, the Toynbee Art Club is holding an exhibition, which includes pictures by several working men, among them Mr. S. H. Hancock, the postman referred to above, and Mr. Albert J. Jeffreys, a milkman. The wind of Art bloweth where it listeth, and there is really no reason why it should go out of its way to avoid the policeman, or to miss the postman and milkman. All three have ample opportunity on their rounds for studying the town in its varying aspects of light, color and atmosphere. Why should they not express their notions pictorially if they have the spirit?

Landscapes and Oils.
The postman has represented is not a Post-impressionist, far from it: his work, mainly landscapes, both in oil and water-color, is on sound, academic lines, and quite to professional standards, being excellent in drawing, agreeable in color, and free from any conception. The milkman, however, belongs to a different category; his work is by no means the cream of the exhibition, but it is very stimulating. One cannot approve of his incoherence, but he does not use his medium purely, mixing it largely with Chinese white to give it a body. One cannot approve of his incoherence, but he does not use his medium purely, mixing it largely with Chinese white to give it a body.

As a whole the exhibition reaches a high level, mainly owing to the numerous young men in poor circumstances. There is a vitality about their work which is very stimulating. Particularly striking are the various ghetto types depicted, pictures of old men, women and children painted with sympathy and understanding. Very effective is the work of Messrs. Apperly, Goldstein, and Hyams Myer, a pencil drawing of an old woman's head by the last mentioned, is an achievement. And, though deficient technically, nothing could be truer to character than the same artist's painting, "The Contrivance,"—between two old Hebrews wherein the facial expression and gesture of the disputants are depicted with the keenest insight and observation; the humorous impatient, and superior air of the one clearly he is not to be caught by specious argument—and the deprecatory, patient tolerance of the other, are admirably caught.

PRUSSIA TO HAVE A CURFEW LAW

(Copyright, 1920, by Public Ledger).
Berlin, Nov. 3.—Curfew will ring at 10 o'clock throughout Prussia this winter except in Berlin and a few other principal cities, where the cafes, restaurants and theatres will be permitted to remain open until 11 o'clock. The hours were laid down last week in a decree from the minister of the interior and probably will apply to all Germany.

The reason for the early closing order is the great possibility of an increase in the coal shortage, which has already forced the coal syndicate to suspend deliveries to electric power plants in the Rhineland and Westphalia, closed down a number of blast furnaces and other plants and necessitated at the greatest possible saving of gas and electric light during the winter. While the crisis is far as rationed deliveries is acute, there has been no difficulty experienced in buying all the coal desired illicitly at prices contrasting favorably with those charged in America. The price of coal and electricity, including a premium for delivery within a coal area, is, for example, $2.50 in Berlin, provided at least fifty hundredweight are taken, and higher for smaller quantities. Black powder has advanced such proportions in central Germany that special "coal police" are about to be established by the government to hunt down the violators and suppress the illicit delivery.

RUMANIA DRAWS PURSE STRINGS; GYPSIES STARVE

Picturesque Vagrants Find It Hard to Catch Pennies in High Cost of Living Days.

Special to The Standard.
Bucharest, Nov. 2.—Of the dozens of different peoples in Rumania, none is more picturesque than the gypsies. Like their prototype in America, they rove the country in great caravans, earning stray pennies by begging, dancing, playing and telling fortunes. I the city they sometimes earn their "bread and butter" by shining shoes, peddling lemonade or acting as porters. The high cost of living, which has drawn tight the strings of every purse, has brought double hardships to these wanderers. No matter how well they play their violins, no matter what good fortune they see in the stars for those about them, they find it hard to coax pennies from the empty pockets of the war-oppressed Rumanian people. Many of them have starved to death.

Some Striking Types
Among the gypsy women and girls are to be found some striking types of beauty. Dark of complexion and hair, with shining, long-lashed black eyes, they are a delight to look upon. They have not acquired the art of using cosmetics as their sisters in the United States do.

Superstition plays a large part in the life of the gypsies. One of the many ancient customs, which survive among the gypsies, is that of the "business agents" of the unions, but ended when the houses submitted to the blackmail; that the amounts the gypsies exacted depended on the size and the character of the job, and the whole matter had been reduced to a science, if such a term can be employed to such a foul course of action. "Wolves and vultures" are the characteristics used by Untermyer in describing the "Business Agents."

In some instances $25,000 was paid to the gatters. As might be expected, the crooks did not "stay put," even when their first demands were met, but through "outlaw" unions, "sympathetic" strikes and other means multiplied their victims further and further. It would be hard enough if this covered all the mischief, but it didn't. Another type of plunderer seems to have found opportunity to exercise his talents. A gentleman who, in addition to experience as a lawyer, had a postgraduate course of "theft" for a traction magnate of national prominence, got various building-material man to agree to present their estimates on contracts to him. He threw out those that were low and set the price around which all should bid on the job. For his work he got a commission of 1 per cent. on the contract. If any outsider "budded in" and got the contract, he was liable to no end of trouble from strikes. The contractor in the combination saw to that and soon taught the outsiders a lesson they didn't forget.

How much more Mr. Untermyer has to reveal is not indicated further than by his statement that only the surface has been scraped. The head devil in the whole affair, far as an organized job is concerned, seems to be a person who came from New England some years ago, worked as a dock wallop for a time, but won such a prominence in labor circles that he has been getting $15,000 a year salary as "Business Agent" and has had aspirations to become master of the American Federation of Labor.

Some labor people feel great resentment over the investigation, declaring it is inspired by Capital. That is nonsense. Honest labor should do its utmost to punish the rascals who have betrayed labor. It is not the contractor or the builder who has been robbed. It is the great body of the public. The sufferers are the people who have had to pay exorbitant rents, whether for the officers, for factories, for apartment quarters, for hotel rooms, for flats or miserable tenements. The sufferers, too, are those who are over-crowded in dwellings, who are forced to live under insanitary conditions, whose health is impaired, who have to skimp on food to pay exorbitant rents. The whole thing is a crime against all the people. The crime is no more of the laborer than of the contractor or supplier who enters into a conspiracy to prevent competition; to make profit for himself at the expense of the helpless.

There is enough in the situation in cities outside New York to suggest that something like that which is being brought to light in New York obtains elsewhere. Untermyer doing a service of general good. Every honest man in the ranks of labor, organized by unions, should give to him his moral if not his material support. He is one of the most serious troubles confronting America today, and those who seek plunder through making corruption of law trouble more difficult and more costly are enemies against public welfare.

government to hunt down the violators and suppress the illicit delivery.
