Heating Honey for the Destruction of the Bacteria of Disease

The only condition under which honey should be heated to a higher temperature than 160° F. is in the case of honey which has been extracted from a colony containing foul brood. In order to kill the bacteria of either of the brood diseases, it is desirable to dilute the honey by adding an equal amount of water and then raise the temperature to the boiling point and keep it there, allowing the mixture to boil vigorously for at least thirty minutes; in order that no risk may be run it is better to make this one hour. Honey which is so treated is changed chemically and is no longer pure honey, but it makes a good syrup for feeding to bees and is the best way of using honey from an infected source. Too much care cannot be exercised in bringing this to the proper temperature, and it must be remembered that the resulting product is not honey but a syrup, the chemical composition of which is quite unlike that of pure honey.

Packing of Extracted Honey

If honey tends to granulate rapidly, it will save much trouble in liquefying to put it into the receptacle in which it is to be sold as soon after extraction as possible. There will then be no difficulty from the various ingredients becoming separated. To preserve the delicate aroma it is desirable that honey be sealed as soon as possible.

When honey is put up in less than 3 packages it is generally bottled. A bottle makes a much more attractive package than a tin can and shows off the contents. There is no doubt of the fact that honey sells largely on its appearance, and the most care cannot be exercised in packing and labelling so as to make the package attractive to the purchaser. In cases where a bee-keeper sells directly to the local trade he may educate his customers to judge his honeys by their flavor,
