THE HOUSE OF COMMONS is now by far the more important branch of the Legislature. All its members are equal within the House. . . . The Commons have an EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO VOTE SUPPLIES OF MONEY and to prescribe the ways and means by which it shall be raised. . . . The English Parliament is practically omnipotent, no Act of Parliament can be set aside by any authority whatsoever, except by the two Houses which passed it.—Constitutional Addenda to Barnett Smith's History of the English Parliament.
