was presided over by James Tibbitts, chair-

The hon, attorney general addressed the convention. He said: "You are no doubt aware that the present term of government might have continued to March 1894. The election that took place in Jan., 1890, under the law gave to the representatives then chosen a term of four years and three months. It was a consideration with the government whether to continue to the end of the term or to terminate the life of the house at an earlier date. This question was discussed pro and con. There is not generally a desire on the part of any government to hasten the time of an election or to shorten the term of their rule. While he had as large, if not larger, experience in men now before the public, he could say that he had no yearning desire to hasten an election. The reasons for calling on an people. election at present are both strong and cogent. One reason why the term was terminated at present was that the full time would carry the election into winter. Statements and accounts could not be laid before the house. Reports could not be got ready after such an election. No information of the standing of the province could be put before the electors. They had decided that it was therefore in the best interests of all to call the election now. We feel, ourselves, he said, to be deserving all credit for the abolition of the council-As one of your representatives he felt

Is it not right, therefore, for this need. government to get the benefit of this reform? It was thought best to kill it by an appeal to the people instead of allowing it to die out by law. This was one reason why we should at this time appeal to the people. There was no better way to tell them that their wishes had been carried out than by such an appeal, and he believed that the response of the people would show that the measure had met with their fullest support. I know that when a government has been in power a number of years there springs up a feeling of enmity. Appointments may cause it, the distributing patronage may displease some and the placing of better men in positions held by inferiors, causes more or less feeling against the government.
