Why Does a Poker

SET HOT AT BOTH ENDS IF LEFT IN THE FIRE!

Both ends of the poker become heated because the poker is made of iron, and iron is a particularly good conductor of heat. To understand this we must look into the question of what a good conductor of heat is. In this case the particles of iron, which combined form the poker, are so close together that when those at the end of the poker which is in the fire get hot, the particles next to them also get hot and so on until the whole poker is hot. The difference between a thing which is a good conductor of heat and a thing which is not a good conductor lies in the ability of the different particles which compose it to hand the heat on to the others. Did you ever notice that the handle of a solid silver spoon will become hot if the spoon is left in hot coffee? Solid silver is a good conductor of heat. A plated spoon is not a good conductor, however, and will not become hot if left in the cup of hot coffee as a solid silver spoon will.

The Littlest Month of All

Of all the months in our long year is February, second one. Marked by ice and snow.

There's other marks so you can tell When February's here— For though it is the littlest month It's packed with fun and cheer.

There's Ground Hog Day and Valentine's And Lincoln's Birthday, too, Another day for Washington Is kept by me and you.

So many of the twenty-eight Are days to underline That we are glad to have this year The month with twenty-nine.

And though it's still the littlest month The extra day of cheer Will make us glad to welcome Once more the glad Leap Year. —Exchange.

And the Worst is Yet to Come

Salt Rheum Covered Her Face Every Winter

I used one sample bottle of D.D.D. and one dollar bottle and it cured my face of Salt Rheum. I spent a good many dollars with doctors and other medicines. I was bothered every winter and last winter I had no trouble. My skin was perfectly free from any spot, thanks to D.D.D. — MRS. JAMES H. RYDER, Brookvale, N. B., Canada.

Anyone suffering from skin trouble—mild or severe—should investigate at once the merits of D.D.D. Try it to-day. Your money back unless the first bottle relieves you.

The Lotion for Skin Disease

AN INVITATION—Wesley Sunday Morning Victory Class throws out its invitation to every convert to come along to the 9 o'clock prayer service and at 9.45 to the regular class service. We are expecting one of Billy Sunday's Choir Boys to sing a solo at the 9.45 service. Everybody welcome.

Australia Must Be White How to Act in 'Flu' Time.

Says the Prime Minister in Answer to Japanese.

If there is one question upon which all Australia may be said to be agreed, it is on the tremendous importance of keeping Australia "white." A long succession of statesmen have approved the policy and enunciated it with force and conviction whenever occasion demanded, until, today, it has taken its place as a national postulate. So firmly convinced is the Australian as to the justice of his position on this matter, and so entirely is he persuaded that, as far as he is concerned, it is really outside the realm of discussion that, when obliged to discuss it, he is able to do so with a quite remarkable detachment. He does not get roused about the matter or allow himself to be betrayed into saying harsh things about his neighbor, or into criticizing other people or their standards of life and conduct. He simply takes his stand on the right, he claims to be the sole judge of who shall and who shall not settle within his borders. He is perfectly willing to extend the same right to other peoples without question.

This attitude was particularly well exemplified by Mr. Hughes, the Australian Prime Minister, in the course of a recent speech in the House of Representatives. Mr. Hughes was describing the stand which he had made, during the Peace Conference in Paris, against the efforts of Japan, supported by several of the powers, to secure the recognition of racial equality, and the practical acceptance of the consequences of this recognition, namely, the throwing open of the doors of Australia to the Japanese immigrant. Mr. Hughes, as he told the story, followed in Paris the usual course. He at once opposed the proposal which was put forward by the Japanese delegate with a quite friendly but quite emphatic refusal. The Japanese delegate, not unnaturally, declined to take no for an answer. The proposal was amended and again amended. Pressure was brought to bear in this direction and in that, and by other delegates than the Japanese. But Mr. Hughes remained quite unmoved. "I said then," he told the House of Representatives, "that it did not matter how they altered it, or what way they put it, we would not accept it."

Mr. Hughes, however, was very far from refusing to discuss the question. To Baron Makino, when he declared that the Japanese were a proud people, and that they regarded it as intolerable that they should not be considered as the equals of Australians and other races, he insisted that he was amongst the first to recognize the Japanese as an equal. He hoped, moreover, that the Japanese people and the Australian people would always be friends. But, he added, a man in his ordinary life did not invite all his friends into his house, and even those he did invite he did not ask to become permanent residents. Because he did not invite a man to his house was not to say that he did not regard him as an equal. It was the right of every freeman to say who should come in and who should not come into his house, and therefore the Australians were not to be regarded as not looking upon Japanese as equals because they desired to exercise this right. He pointed out that Japanese ideals and Australian ideals were different. He would not venture to say that Australian ideals were greater and better than Japanese ideals. He would content himself with saying that they were different. The paths of the two peoples lay in different directions, and the Australians must tread theirs according to take instincts and impulses which came from their history and their race.

Having said this and more along the same lines, Mr. Hughes just stood. It was a typical attitude, and the Australian Prime Minister was quite justified in remarking, as he did, "I knew I spoke for Australia."—Christian Science Monitor.

Seals in the Wash.

THEY ARE NOW TO BE SEEN AROUND ENGLISH COAST.

If you visit that big shallow bay on the East Coast of England, known as the Wash, you may see seals by the score.

They are lying on the sand-banks like flocks of sheep.

Until recently they had practically vanished from the English coast.

The return of the seal, like the great increase of fish in the North Sea, is one of the results of the war. Another cause is the fact that they are under the protection of the Local Government Board.

Four different sorts of seals are found on British coasts. Those seen in the Wash are the common seal. One is apt to think of seals in connection with ice floes, but the common seal has no use for ice. It is always to be seen upon sand-banks or beaches, and ranges as far south as the Mediterranean.

This sort has no fur, but its skin is covered with hair, while its flesh is quite good to eat.

The Harp Seal—so-called from the dark harp-shaped mark on its back—is a larger animal, being as much as nine feet long. It has been seen on various parts of the British coast.

So, too, has the Ringed Seal, a small species which is very common in Greenland.

The finest of all British seals is the Great Bearded Seal. The bulls are often as much as ten feet in length and of immense weight.

All the seals are terrible destroyers of fish, especially of salmon. Consequently they are not popular with fishermen. On Danish coasts a reward is paid for their destruction, and they are being killed off at the rate of a thousand a year.
