LONDON GOSSIP.

LONDON, Oct. 12, 1921.

SIGNS THAT FLASH IN THE NIGHT.—In pre-war years the night life of London was embittered by several flashing electric signs, of which the Highlander perched against a chimney on the Waterloo side of the river was the most notorious. In spite of themselves people watched him as his board and kit flicked into life and faded, and the lettering of the advertisement madly changed colour. They grumbled at him and looked again. It is evident that London is now to endure a multiplication of these irritating signs. The old-time changing advertisements at Charing Cross and Tottenham Court Road which wrote in different colours the names of several cures and tonics have come back, and every week new ingenuities come to dazzling light, congregating chiefly about the theatre area. The newest device at Piccadilly Circus is a baby food advertisement which writes itself in flashing lamps, purple, green, and blue. Next to it is an advertisement of some wine. A yellow wineglass comes into view, and from the bottle filled with red liquor held above it a stream of red wine runs into the glass. It does not stop when the glass is filled, but the magical crystal never overflows. Then the light fades and the whole performance begins again. The motor-car advertisement beside it has two cardboard figures in a motor-car. When the light flashes on, the red ribbons in the lady's hat flutter; the road runs past, and the wheels whirl madly round for a minute; then blackness and the thing begins again. Shaftsbury Avenue has less unusual designs of lettering coming and going and changing colour, but the most maddening device of all is at the New Oxford Street corner, where underneath a lettered advertisement two zigzag flashes of lightning flick backwards and forwards. It is difficult to believe that people could watch these long and retain their hold on civilization.

A DOCTOR'S WONDERLAND.—The exhibition season, which in London seems to suffer no interval in the 12 months of the year, has brought two more shows—the London Medical Exhibition, opened at Central Hall, Westminster, and the International Shoe and Leather Fair at the Agricultural Hall. At the former doctors will have an opportunity of inspecting most of the latest marvels in the sciences affecting their profession, and the crowds on the opening day have indicated a keen desire to do so. The stalls are replete with everything that is new and up-to-date, from the finest Hospital X-ray equipment to the newest tabloid or the latest celloid preparation. An interesting section is devoted to artificial limbs, and in one stump of an arm gives practical illustration of a new product by which, with a series of detachable "gadgets," he is able to perform on the piano.

play the violin, swing a golf club, or wield a fiddly hammer with ease. Sections are likewise devoted to optical science, surgical appliances, and every other kind of requirement which can conceivably be brought within the realm of medical practice.

BARGAINS FOR YOUNG DOCTORS.—Excellent results, I am informed, have been achieved from the system adopted for the sale of the Government's surplus medical stores, and their disposal through the agency of the British Red Cross Society is believed to have affected a saving to the country of a large sum of money. The enlistment of an organization which is in close touch with all branches of the profession has enabled the Disposal Board to realize a section of their stores more rapidly than by any other means, apart from a big deal in the entire stock; but it has at the same time had the advantage that doctors, nurses and medical institutions have been given fullest opportunity of obtaining such bargains as are to be found among the nation's surplus war stocks. At the huge depot where the business is transacted at Shepherd's Bush, and which I had the opportunity of visiting, I was able to see how extensively the facilities were being taken advantage of. An enormous amount of business is done daily. Doctors and representatives of institutions come from all over the country in search of their requirements, and the enormous masses of stores and their bewildering variety ensuring that few visits are futile. What seemed to be a feature of the sales was the great number of young doctors and medical students from London hospitals chiefly, who were fitting themselves out with elaborate sets of surgical instruments and appliances.

THE LAST OF SUMMER-TIME.—In Bond Street this afternoon I saw a man wearing a white top hat, and wearing a summer frock were many. London is enjoying serene, warm weather, and, although the out-fitters display cardigans in their windows, few people realize that we have passed the Autumn Equinox and that this is the last week of summer-time. Next week, when we find that the evenings grow dark immediately after tea, we shall also be surprised, and how many people know that, according to the present intentions of Parliament, we shall have said farewell to summer-time for good. It has been enjoined on us from year to year by order of D.O.R.A., but that seems to have died, and when the Government, during this year, tried to pass a Bill making summer-time a permanent yearly institution, the quiet opposition of agricultural M.P.'s and the loquacity of Commander Kenworthy gave them an excuse for dropping the proposal. So, if the populations of our towns and villages do not agitate strongly next spring, we shall not have summer-time again.

LONDON SWELTERS.—Recently the shade temperature in London was 77 degrees. To-day it has reached 74, with a hot wind. More remarkable still, in the intervening night, the thermometer never fell below 62. September gave us hotter days—four above 78—one of which reached 86 at Croyden—but generally speaking the nights were cooler. This temperature was equalled on September 14, but I doubt whether in any previous year an October night has been hotter. It came after one or two nights with fog and a slight frost, and so found Londoners sleeping under winter blankets and elderdowns when a hammock in the garden would really have been more comfortable. The daytime heat found people as inappropriately clad. One saw men in the city wearing knitted waistcoats, and in the Park almost every woman sweltered in furs. Those who donned print dresses again were few indeed. I am writing now after supper, in a room with the window open and the thermometer at 70. Tomorrow or the next day we shall probably have to light the stoves.

BOHEMIANS TIRE OF DANCING.—A certain little club just off Piccadilly, which, until this year, never prospered, is becoming such a success that I hear that two similar establishments ments are to be opened in October. The secretary declares the secret of his club's new popularity lies in the fact that there is no dancing. It seems that London Bohemians are revolting against the blare of the Jazz Band and the shuffle of dancing feet, and have deserted the so-called aristocratic clubs that since the Armistice have been swamped by the dancing youth of the suburbs. This club aims at a revival of the art of conversation, and its little orchestra of four restricts its melodies to those through which the human voice is audible.

MUMPS AT CHEQUERS.—There is an epidemic of Scarlet Fever or measles in the village just outside the Premier's estate at Chequers, so Lloyd George has been advised not to go there next week-end. If he did not catch the trouble himself, his car might bring the infection back to Downing Street—and then the whole Cabinet might catch mumps.

PUBLIC UTILITY SOCIETIES AND HOUSING.—There has been an increasing rush during the last few weeks on the new houses erected in the London district. I hear of one house in a London suburb, containing two living rooms and three bedrooms, that is now occupied by three families. In fact, overcrowding is still so bad that it is becoming more and more apparent that the Government will be compelled to work out a new housing policy. Housing experts are urging that this new policy should be devised carefully during the coming winter. At the same time the Government are being pressed to fulfil their obligations to those public utility societies which are now carrying out housing schemes. Most of these societies are composed of working men who have put up their "savings" relying on the promise that financial assistance will be given in respect of all schemes carried out by the end of July next year. But, as with local authorities' schemes, the plans of public utility societies have been so drastically curtailed that in several cases their solvency is seriously threatened.

Manufacture of Ammonia.

What is described as an interesting discovery for the synthetic manufacture of ammonia has recently been made by a French scientist. His method is to extract the hydrogen from a mixture of hydrogen and carbon monoxide produced by passing steam through red-hot coke. This is done by compressing the gas given off to thirty-five atmospheres when its temperature is reduced to 207 degrees (centigrade) below zero. The carbon monoxide then liquefies, leaving hydrogen in a pure state. It is claimed that by this process 220 cubic metres of hydrogen can be produced in an hour. The ammonia is obtained by submitting a mixture of this hydrogen and nitrogen to extremely high pressure.
