The dissenting portion of the congregation contended that as the parties' names were not on the church roll they were not entitled to sit at the Lord's table. On account of this dispute the pastor sent in his resignation, and at a congregation meeting held shortly after it was refused by the majority. The dissenting portion, among whom were the gentlemen against whom the action is brought, withdrew from the church and asked that their names be struck off the church roll, which was done. QUIETING A MOB.
The world will never know how much of the boldness of the press has been inspired by the editorial "we." It is too common an experience in all the relations of life that men begin to "back out" when they are asked to fortify an assertion with a signature, or to "stand up and be counted."

Even revolutionists do not always have the courage of heroes. An amusing story of a collapse is told by the author of "Les Memoires de Paris."

On the evening of Aug. 7, 1884, there was a meeting of disaffected persons to discuss the action of the French Legislature, in session. The meeting became more and more noisy. After some comparatively temperate speeches by the ex-deputies Maret and Laisant, the Anarchists took the floor, and one of them proposed that those present should go in a body to Versailles, invade the hall of Parliament, and turn out the Opportunists, who, according to the speaker, were nothing but Orleansists in disguise.

Then Lisbonne, leaning on the stick which he was obliged to use, one of his legs having been nearly paralyzed by a wound received in battle, mounted the platform and cried, "Citizens, you wish to go to Versailles?"

"Yes," they shouted, fiercely.

"Very well! I am ready to go. You know me, and where I live. I am Lisbonne. You know my record. I am not content to talk, I act also. In May there were in Paris 200,000 persons who shouted 'Vive Commune!' only 10,000 of these did any fighting. I must not be like that now!"

"No!" roared the mob.

"Good!" went on Lisbonne; "there are 900 of you who cry, 'We will go to Versailles!' Do you mean it?"

"Yes, to Versailles!" thundered the Anarchists.

"We will go then. But you can understand since you all know me, that I wish to know you also. I will take down your names and addresses. Will all those who will go with me to-morrow morning to Versailles come to this side of the hall? Come, citizens, right file, right!"

There was a quick movement, and several citizens placed themselves on the side of the hall named by the orator.

Lisbonne counted them. There were nineteen! With an eloquent gesture he said:

"I salute you, heroes! I admire you, and in the name of our great cause I salute you; but you perceive that we twenty are not enough to clear the hall of Parliament."

Then turning to the others he said:

"Get out, chattering! I believe you will keep still for a while. Go home to your wives. Since there is nothing to be done, I am going on to the cafe. You can find me there, if you are not content," and he limped away.

There were murmurs of indignation among the crowd, but no one mentioned Versailles again.
