mote and sparsely populated section of the province.

That was what the British Columbia council had been brought into expected for and, he thought, it was fulfilling its mission admirably. There could be no more important duty than the protection of the public from incompetent medical men. And that was what had been done because, in the endeavor to promote that this was what had been many such, from the United States and elsewhere, make application only to find that they required more than a smattering of medicine to be allowed to "hang out their shingle in British Columbia."

Now the results of the work were becoming apparent. Only men who honestly considered themselves sufficiently well acquainted with the profession applied and, consequently, the majority passed. "Had the entire thirty-six acquired the necessary percentage of the properties of the majority passed. "Had the entire thirty-six acquired the necessary percentage of the province of the principal resources of British Columbia."

Istened to their arguments, and, while declining to commit himself without giving the matter a few days' consideration, explained the position of the scheme the provincial government. He pointed out that, heretofore, all the moneys received from the industry had been expended in the endeavor to promote that business. It was recognized that this was one of the principal resources of British Columbia. Therefore the wish of his colleagues in the public interests, to introduce and enforce regulations that would prevent the extermination of the salmon. The effort had been expensive. In fact, Commissioner Bowser stated, in the industry than had been forthcoming through government levies upon those who were profiting from it. majority passed. "Had the entire thirty-six acquired the necessary per-centage they would have been given licenses." Dr. Fagan continued. The medical profession was not a close corporation, its work was in the best interests of the public generally. A complete list of the successful candidates, given in alphabetical or-

Better Police Protection

The third petition was that a better police system be inaugurated in those districts in proximity to the fishing camps of the north. This Commissioner Bowser proposes shall be done. He stated that there might be much truth in the assertion that, while the salmon run was in progress and there were many Indians, Japs and whitemen gathered at these places, liquor was taken there in large quantities for their consumption. This, it was said, had distressed and interfered with the operation of the canneries at the busiest season, in past years. He promised that he would take steps to prevent, if pospast years. He promised that he would take steps to prevent, if possible, the recurrence of such a state of affairs.

west in order to maintain the regulations. The British Columbia administration said, in the first place, that these were not satisfactory and, secondly, that the federal government was constrained to enforce these laws by the terms on which the province had entered confederation even if they did not collect a cent of revenue from the west. Briefly that was the situation and the province was determined to exercise what it considered its rights from this time forth.

It was the intention, Commissioner Bowser continued, to do everything possible to establish such regulations as would satisfy the public demand, salmon. Then there had been provincial patrol boats employed at various points and outlays made in other directions for the purpose of caring for the fish with which British Columbia's name was inseparably associated in the principal markets of the outside world.

The prospects were, Commissioner Bowser went on, that this expense would be increased now that the provincial government had definitely decided to enforce the province's right to the control of her own asheries. The new act would have to be strictly adhered to in every detail irrespective of any attitude that might be assumed by the Dominion authorities. To carry out such a policy, revenue would be necessary. For all these rea
