CANCER DUE TO THOUGHTLESS FOOD SELECTION

Sir W. Arbuthnot Lane, of London, one of the foremost surgeons of the world, has written to The London Daily Mail, and he has also a letter in a recent issue of a Canadian Medical Journal, charging that cancer is caused by the dietetic refinement of our chief foodstuffs, the grains. He lays special blame upon white flour and refined cereals.

Dr. Robt. G. Jackson, of Toronto, editor of The Dietetic Age of New York City, a journal circulating among physicians, has been teaching this for years and, because he was convinced of this fact and also that food deficiencies cause a lot of other of the diseases of civilized people, he invented Roman Meal, a food made from whole wheat, whole rye, flax and bean. These blended scientifically in proportion to make a balanced human food. It supplies the deficiencies of flour and other refined "ghost cereals" and should be used in some form daily at least several times each week. It prevents indigestion and positively relieves constipation. Because of its growth-promoting properties, it is especially valuable in feeding nursing and expectant mothers and children from the tenth month. At grocers.—Adv.
