"CHARLEY PRECIOUS."

He likes to open the gate and steal out when no one is near to lead him back. One day he strayed so far away from home that no one seemed to know him or where he came from.

"Where are you going, little fellow?" asked a big man who felt sure the baby must be lost.

"I dess I'd better go home and see my mamma," he answered wisely.

"What is your mamma's name?" was the next question.

Wide opened the blue eyes in wonder at such sweet pretty ignorance.

"Why, she's mamma, of tourse."

"Yes, but what is the family name? What do they call you?"

"I'se Tsarley."

"Charley? Charley what?"

"Oh, Tsarley Pwecious."

"Well, if you are so precious," laughed the man, "they'd better put a tag on you the next time they let you out."
