THE Grain Crops of the United States tell upon the markets of the world, and the Monthly Report issued at the end of September by the Commissioner of Agriculture at Washington is consequently a document of some importance. We shall therefore cull from it a few items. The Wheat Crop of the entire Union is estimated at 5 per cent. below average. In Northern New England, the quality is generally good, but the quantity less than usual. Massachusetts and Connecticut have a full average yield, but upon an area too small to be of essential aid in the bread supply. Out of 35 counties representing the largest portion of the wheat area of New York State, only two rise above average. New Jersey is above average, and the grain was harvested in excellent condition. Pennsylvania is considerably above average, and the grain there is making an unusually good quality of flour. Maryland is 4 per cent. below average. The present has not been a good wheat year in the South. Alabama, Texas, Virginia, and North Carolina are 18 per cent. below average; South Carolina and Georgia, 25; Mississippi, 10. Arkansas and Tennessee have better crops than the Gulf-coast States, but not a full average. Kentucky falls 15 per cent. below average, as a whole, though some counties report one of the best crops ever obtained. There is much complaint from unwholesome flour, from wheat grown in low lands. Ohio reports cover more than half the area in wheat, and indicate a very nearly average yield of average quality. Michigan has nearly a full crop;
