REGULATIONS

Of the Local Board of Health for the District of the City and County of Saint John.

By-Laws Relating to the Exposing for Sale and Handling of Food-Products in the County of the City and County of Saint John.

Mr. Hatheway was the first speaker of the delegation. In opening he said he regretted that John E. Wilson, who was deeply interested in the question of technical education, had been unable to attend.

The Dominion manufacturers, he said, had passed two strong resolutions, expressing their approval of the idea of establishing technical schools. The trades and labor congress has also adopted resolutions demanding technical schools. Locally, the board of trade took up the matter shortly after the visit of the Royal commission. About ten days ago a delegation waited upon the local government and outlined a plan of establishing technical schools here. The reason they did this was that they found it would be necessary to amend the school act, in order to give the school board power to take up the matter of providing technical education. Members of the government seemed to be quite favorable to the proposition put before them.

Continuing, Mr. Hatheway said the idea of the board of trade was to have the school trustees open a class room in one of their buildings during evenings—either at Lower Cove or in the neighborhood of Brunells street, preferably near Lower Cove, as the big industries were located in that vicinity. They would ask the government to set aside $200 a year and would expect the trustees to grant a similar amount. The sum of $400 might not seem very much, but it was felt it would be enough to start a trial school with 20 pupils. Managers of large local industries were interested in the proposition and it was thought that the managers and foremen could be induced to deliver lectures to the classes.

Mr. Bullock—Would these men act as teachers without remuneration?

Mr. Hatheway said the idea was to give them a small remuneration for their services.

Mr. Russell—Wouldn't it be better to have a permanent teacher?

Mr. Hatheway said a permanent teacher would be needed in time. He did not think the attendance would be large at first, though the correspondence schools had over 400 students paying for technical instruction in this city.

Mr. Estabrooks said there could be no disagreement as to the need of technical education here. He thought to start in a modest way would be the best way to assure success.

Mr. Hatheway said he thought technical instruction in evening classes would be better than in conjunction with the day classes. Many boys left school before they should, and it would be a great advantage to them to receive instruction in the theories and principles of the trade they were working at during the daytime.

Mr. Robert Maxwell said the curriculum of the school should be of an year's old, and might be better adapted to present day needs. Some years ago the board established a number of night schools, which were well attended at first, but the only thing that kept the regular day school curriculum and the attendance fell off.

Continuing he said that in his opinion the instruction given should be somewhat of the nature provided in the Normal training schools. He did not think they should try to establish trade schools, because they would meet with opposition from the trade unions. But manual training, drawing, etc., might be profitably combined with theoretical instruction.

C. Winter Brown said he would like to see an evening technical school for boys. He knew from personal experience with boys that there was great need of such schools here. Many boys took up the correspondence classes, but often dropped out, because there were no teachers here to help them over difficulties.

Mr. Hatheway said he hoped they would have commercial schools in time.

Mr. Bullock said the board would not be able to open evening schools in October. They could not vote any money till January next. The common council had used them rather rough this year.

H. V. Hayes, principal of the Normal training schools spoke in favor of the idea of evening technical schools, saying it was in line with developments in other cities.

After some discussion the board adopted a motion to ask the government for power to establish technical schools.
