

the advance of science and a broader spirit recognizing the demands for a greater measure of protection of human life, some countries are now facing these problems by the introduction of state laws.

At the present time, with the power reposed in this Conservation Commission of recommending legislation for the advancement of the interests of the people of this Dominion, we are in a position to make as much progress in sanitation as any country in the world, showing that the conservation of human life in this Dominion is considered to be of supreme importance, and that the powers of governing are being used in the interest of the national welfare, with the aim of producing a healthy, happy race of people.
