THE TWO WAYS.

BY JEAN WALKER

Oh Master, once I felt that loving Thee,
Was Via Dolorosa all the way,
No glad light giving even one bright ray,
But cruel thorns and mocking robe for me,
Groping for light in ways too dark to see.
In sombre shadows evermore to stray,
Seeing no farther than the cross each day,
Dark-bound in fear, yet longing to be free.
But now the way with joy and peace is bright;
The chalice of Thy love with bliss o'erflows
And fills my soul with rapturous delight.
Though thorns may pierce, He heals and grace
bestows,
And earth's dark ways illumines with its light,
While round the cross love's pure effulgence glows.
