That is the one thing which the Germans lack, and it will be their downfall; they systemize organization, but they have no esprit; they lack the personal element."

This was his first :...ark when interviewed by a Courier man this morning. Continuing, he said:—

"The war has wrought many and wonderful changes everywhere" continues Capt. Jeakins. "One of the most wonderful, and most desirable, from my point of view, is the wonderful manner in which our ally France has found once more her soul, which she had previously lost. In England, there was never before such unity of purpose as that which now exists inroughout the length and breadth of the country with regard to the war, for the winning of salted by covering of all are expend.

The spirit of the allied troops is nothing to the men at the front, tates the returned elergyman. Under the excitement of the moment, to sense of fear is felt." Had I remained at the front, I should be there yet? he believes. "It was the work in the hospitals, where men wounded and shattered were carried in, direct from the fields of battle, which wrongent the truin of my nervous system. I was fortunate indeed in remaining with the 58th battalion also long as I did, for the chaplains do not usually do so. Our battalion was every few did. It was very fe
