Ayer's Hair Vigor is composed of Sulfur, Glycerin, Quinine, Sodium Chloride, Castor Oil, Sage, Alcohol, Water, Perfume.

Show this to your doctor. Ask him if there is a single injurious ingredient. Ask him if he thinks Ayer's Hair Vigor, as made from this formula, is the best preparation you could use for falling hair, or for dandruff. Let him decide. He knows.

Lady Marjorie's Love

"Don't go," she said. "I should not have said that. I know Mr. Chadburn has been very kind. I—I didn't mean to offend you, Mr. Barrington."

"There's no offence, Lady Marjorie, not in the very least in the world."

"He spoke warmly, heartily; somehow he had got hold of her hand, which she did not at all know whether she gave him or not. At any rate she pulled it away. And instead of rising on her side, as he had expected that she would, she settled herself back in the corner of the sofa again. She did not look much more than a child in her black frock. There were a couple of clove earrings stuck into the waistband, and she took them out and began to pull them to pieces petal by petal.

"I say all sorts of random things sometimes, you know," she said, with a rather uncertain little laugh, unaccountably conscious that he must have seen her eyelids twinkle just now. "Penella—the Countess—will tell you that. She is rather hard on my weakness because she hasn't got any herself." She stopped and gave him a pleading look. "You won't tell Mr. Chadburn I said that particular thing will you?"

"Why not? Mr. Chadburn would be pleased to know that you think him kind."

"Oh, that." The smile she gave him was very pretty. "I suppose you have known him many years, Mr. Barrington."

"Since I was a boy."

"Oh, so long as that." She reflected, curious now that she had really allowed herself to relax, but scarcely knowing how to shape the question she wanted to ask. "Have you always been with him then?"

"Always—that is," she said explaining, "since I was quite a youngster, you know."

"Since you were old enough to do anything," said Marjorie, with a nod of comprehension. "That's what I mean. And that, of course explains why you think so highly of him. Is he as kind to all his employes I wonder, as he is to you?"

"He is kind to every one. But," Barrington said, with a smile, "I should be very ungrateful if I did not confess that I know I am rather a favorite."

"Perhaps he is as fond of you as you are of him, Marjorie suggested, misguidedly.

"I am afraid he has a better opinion of me than I deserve, Lady Marjorie."

"Oh, because he has known you so long?"

"Well, that may be the reason. Very possibly it is. We're all liable to prejudices, you know."

"Are we?" For reasons of her own she did not choose to pursue that subject. She stroked Jack's sleek head as he sprang upon her knee. "What is his son like?" she asked suddenly.

"His son?" Marjorie's eyes opened in wonder. "Mr. Chadburn's son, you know. He has a son, has he not?"

"A son? Mr. Chadburn? Oh—er—yes. He has a son certainly."

"I felt sure that Mr. Petherick told me so. What is he like?"

"Like—well—er—er—" She stammered and looked from her questioning eyes to the banners over her head. "Really, Lady Marjorie, I'm afraid I'm a desperately bad hand at description, you know. Like? Like? Why—er—I suppose I must say that he's pretty much like other people."

"Oh," Marjorie's red upper lip gave its little disdainful twitter. "I see that sort of person."

"Yes—that sort of person."

"You are not very explicit, are you?" She laughed aloud. "I hope I shan't offend you again, Mr. Barrington, if I say I never can bear people who have nothing particular about them and can't be described. Seriously, they must be awfully stupid and uninteresting you know. Now don't you agree with me? But of course you do—you must. So Mr. Chadburn's son is like that. But it's often the way, isn't it, with those rich people who have made a lot of money? Do you like him—the son?"

"Like that? Well—er—well, of course I take a good deal of interest in him."

"For his father's sake, no doubt."

"Oh, and for his own, I assure you."

"Then you mean you do like him, although he is stupid?" she cogitated.

"He is like his father?"

"Something in looks, I think. Oh yes, a good deal like him. But I'm afraid he will never be half so fine a fellow."

"Of course not if he is such a simpleton." Marjorie nodded her head.

TESTIMONY OF FIVE WOMEN Proves That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is Reliable.

Reedville, Ore.—"I can truly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all women who are passing through the Change of Life, as it made me a well woman after suffering three years."

—Mrs. MARY BOGART, Reedville, Oregon.

From a Man Who Knows

From the Magdalen Islands, away down among the fogs of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, comes a letter from a man who knows that Dr. Chase's Ointment is not only a relief but also a positive cure for protruding piles. Too many make the mistake of stopping this treatment when relief is obtained, when by persistence, they could be entirely cured.
