LOOKING AND SEEING.

THERE IS A VAST DIFFERENCE BE TWEEN THESE TWO ACTS.

It Is Important to Cultivate the Power of Observation Even In Ordinary Things - A Faculty Possessed by All, but Developed by Few.

It is the hope and desire of all pas ents that their children shall make some sort of a mark in the world when they grow up. They do not in the majority of cases expect that their offspring will become famous and make names that will live for ages, but they cherish the thought that they will be successful men and women in some profession or business. That is the keynote, that success shall be their portion.

Yet it is a fact that most parents neglect or pay very little attention to one part of the child's education which is of the highest importance. They do not train the perceptive faculties. Power of observation will help you more than anything else in your struggle for existence, and yet there are comparatively few people who are keen observers. One small fact will prove this latter statement. The man who observes everything, he who sees everything he looks at, is singled out either as an inquisitive person or a clever one, and this shows that he is an exception.

It is easy to give instances of this lack of perception even in the ordinary things of life. Some years ago an artist engaged in a London firm of printers had to draw an advertisement in which the central figure was a cock in the act of crowing. Nothing seemed easier, but when he set to work the artist found himself confronted by a difficulty-does the cock show its tongue prominently when it crows? Every one of the hundred men employed by the firm had seen a cock crow scores of times, yet not one of them could answer the question. The artist had to go to a friend who kept fowls and chase the poor rooster round and round the yard until it crowed.

A/schoolmaster, wishing to test the perception of his boys, asked them how many times they had seen a cow or pictures of that animal and found, as he had expected, that all the boys had seen the creature more times than they could remember. Then he offered to give small prizes to the boys who could correctly answer this question, "Are a cow's ears above, below, in front of or behind its horns?" Only two boys gained prizes, and theirs was guess work. Now sit down and test yourself in some such simple manner. You have all seen a horse "down." Can you describe how it rises? Does it get up on its fore feet first and then on its hind feet or does it kneel first, then get on its hind feet and finally on its fore

However, you need not confine your self to the animal kingdom in testing your perceptive faculties jects will suggest themselves to you on

As an excuse for this want of observation it is often urged that "a man can't know everything," but the excuse is a bad one. There is a great difference between knowing little or nothing and knowing everything. When the faculty has been trained, it requires no more effort to note the points of the object looked at than it does to glance at that same object and come away none the wiser. The chances of success in life are on the side of the man who knows certain things because he has learned about them by using his senses instead of having to go to a book for all that he wishes to know. Books are undispensable, as there are so many things which cannot come within the range of our observation; but, wherever possible, we should use our senses to acquire knowledge at first hand. This will explain why men who cannot read or write have built up substantial businesses. They have made use of the power possessed by all, but Cultivated by very few.

The perceptive faculty must be trained during childhood and youth. After the completion of the twentieth year very little progress can be made. A grown man is unable to develop his powers of observation to any satisfactory degree. Youth is full of energy, and that is the time to incufcate the lesson that we should see all that our eyes rest upon.

It should be the object of every parent to teach his child to note every object that comes in his way. When out or a watk in a park, the child should be told to observe the shapes of the leaves on the different trees, the paling of the color of animals toward the under part of the body and so on and should be told that when asked a question on the subject he must be prepared to say that it is so, not that be thinks it is. All children have inquiring minds, and after a walk or two, coupled with such instruction as we have mentioned, you will find the child making great progress and acquiring a quality that will be invaluable to him in after life. One of the methods adopted by Houdin, the conjurer, for quickening the perception of his son was to make him walk rapidly past a shop window or a stall on which a number of articles were displayed and then write down a list of the objects noticed. At first only half a dozen articles were perceived during the moment occupied in passing the store or window, but after having done it once a day for a month the boy was able to make a list of 40 objects.

A PEN PICTURE OF "BOBS." is Wonderful Sway Over Men, His Uniform Kindness, Strength of Will and Quickness of

I suppose I have never been in the presence of a leader of men who has exercised such a complete and general way over the hearts of his countrymen as does Field Marshal Lord Rob erts-the "Bobs" and "Little Bobs" of his devoted warriors. I have had no chance yet to analyze the source or secret of his power. I have thus far seen in him and heard of him only the demonstrations of his comma over men — especially over their af-fections; and as for its source he has thus far emphasized nothing but the most extraordinary kindliness, gen-tleness and sympathy. He is very quiet in manner, very free and demo-cratic with all who do not try to be too free with him, very broad in seeking and accepting information from all who can give it to him, no natter how humble or unaccomplished they may be.

He is enriched with such a striking face that his small stature does no count against him. He has a noble and what is called aristoctatic face, such as might have belonged to a Marshal of France in the days when France possessed men and virtue. Though I have described him as gentle, he is strong in will and quick of judgment. At his very starting out on this expedition, which has driven the bird of victory from the Boer to the British standard, he was de-layed by a wholly unexpected attack on his transport train of 240 buckwagons and thousands of oxen. With this was practically all of the very little food he was able to carry after his rapidly moving army of 35,000 men, yet on the instant that he realized a necessity for despatching large force, and the consequent weakening of his army, to save the train he ordered it abandoned. A little later, when his army had made unparalleled marches on a biscuit a day per man, and when his horses were even less supplied with forage, he ordered the burning of an immense supply of biscuits, compressed hay oats at Paardeberg. It seemed in-comprehensible — almost criminal but he had no wagons to fetch the food along, and he said he did not propose to let it so to the Boers, who were even in greater need of supplies than his men. In these actions we see the gigantic strength of his grip upon his men, for though they were torn by hunger and spent with fatigue, not a Tommy in his ranks ut tered a single word of complaint. Methuen would have been damned by his troops, and a Kitchener would have moved amid a stifled chorus of complaint; but whatever Lord Rob erts does is right and satisfactory to every British soldier. In fact, his men consider whatever he does to be inspired. They are proud to endure whatever hardships he imposes on them, and where another general would be voted a brute for marching his men 20 miles in a day Roberts can march them twice as far with a certainty that of every two Tommies

Free Library Existed in the Days of The British Museum is just about to issue a book which shows that the free library is, after all, not so young an institution, says the New York Evening Post. The last vol-ume of the catalogue of the library of Assur-bani-pal-better known to us as Sardanapalus-is now in the press. In 1880 Sir Henry Layard, while exploring the ruins of Ninevah, came upon a series of chambers whose floors were covered thickly with clay tablets inscribed with tiny cuneiform characters which at that time hardly any one was able to read fluently. It is now known that these tablets were the remains of the royal library of Sardanapalus. It is estimated that this library contained some 10,000 distinct works in all branches of literature, and the work of recataloguing it is only now com plete, after lifty years of research. These tablets appear to have been methodically catalogued and arranged in the seventh century B.C., and it is clear that the whole library was placed at the free disposal of the subjects of its owner. Even in the days of Sardanapalus a free library was already a very ancient institution. We learn from the catalogue of Sarron's library at Agane (about 2000 B. C.)," says Dr. Sayce, "that each (book) was numbered, so that the student had only to write down the number of the tablet he wanted and the librarian thereupon handed it to him." This library was specially consulted by students of astronomy and astrology.
