What is Success.

Most of us are so in the habit of me oi the external success which it win though this is not without its value, bu though this is not without its value, but according to the fulness and richness of its development. The only value of external success is as a sign of interior apprict. Our successes ought not to be things which are achieved by force of will or by skill of hand simply; they ought to be the fruits which the spirit of our lives bears, as naturally as the tree bears its appropriate fruit. No teally strong Canada.

Mr Robert Marshall of St John, in an issue of the hear a short time since gave a compilation of interesting figures short ing the progress of Canada in the twenty years of the confederation closing with 1887.
