Not was the scene incapable of bearing the strictest scuting, even from an eye of taste, for, in the first place, the ground itself had been admirably chosen. This apot, forming a portion of the Lawn attached to Government House, had, by the kindness of His Excellency Sir Dominic; Daly been appropriated to the purpose for that day, and was, really; well adapted to the character of a Fete Champetre, being embowered in trees, with a carpet of green sward spread over an undulating surface.

Before the arrival of the visuals, a magnificent tent lined with the flags of friendly nations had been erected under the directions of Commander R. B. Pearse, of H. M. S. Arab—and, willingness to oblige, so proverbial among our British seamen, but added elegance and grace to a scene that nature had adorned with its own proper beauties.

And if art concurred with nature, thus far, to please the eye, it was not wanting in its efforts to please both eye and palate at the tables.

offorts to please both eye and palate at the efforts to please both eye and palate at the tables.

These, four in number, splendid in appearance garnished with besitting ornaments, and enriched with delicacies, formed an attraction which many could not resist, the the pocket suffered; but, as every one had gone prepared to help the good object, few were averse to receiving some remuneration, in the way of a treat, for themselves or the young ones who flocked around. And so, cakes and jellies and pine apples and ices and pastry, strawberries and sweeties disspeared gradually, yet surely, as the evening; hours came on—and, what with music, and conversation, and promenading, the evening itself passed off, and, with it, the assemblage, and, with them the contents of the tables, until there was "left not a wreck behind."

Among the assemblage we noticed His Excellency with Lady Daly and family—the officers of H. M. S. Arab—and many persons from the country—and it was admitted on all hands that the display was, in every point of viewmost creditable to our young city, and especially to the Ladies who exerted themselves so indefatigately in the cause of Charity.

We understand that a sum of about £100 was realized.
