help feeling greatly alarmed ; I had given my father the largest dose prescribed by the ritual, held the of medicine that Windsor had permitted me to administer, and instead of trangilising him, as it was intended to do, it had the effect of increasing his restlessness. As yet there was no sign of the much longed for visitor; was it possible that Frith had lost his way in the dark, or had some unforseen accident oc cured? Perhaps the whole party had fallen into the hands of one of Topecliffe's patrols? These and many other possible contingencies crowded into my mind and every moment my hopes grew fainter.

Nor was this all; something fresh happened which led me almost to despair of the success of our enterprise. The man whom I had lock ed into the opposite room, weary o his solitary confinemet, or perhapsuspecting that some project was on foot, began knocking at the door. and asking to be let out. At first he knocked gently and spoke in a low tone, but I immediately recognized the voice as Topcliffe's. Acting on impulse, I flang the key out of the windom with all my might in the direction of the pond. - I heard it fall with a splash into the water, and at the same time a slight sound coming from the stable reached my ear. What it was I could not determine, for just then Topcliffe began to hammer the door with his boots and call lustily or his followers to come to his help.

What was to be done ! I almos regreted having locked the man in and thrown away the key, for the noise he was making was enough to bring all of his men round the door, and then what would be the fate the priest, should he arrive at this juncture? And even as these thoughts passed through my mind, 1 heard footsteps on the pebbles be neath the window, and at the same moment the top of the ladder appeared at the casement. Anne, too, aroused from her sleep by the disturbance Topcl ffe made, now rushed into the room, startled and confused, inquiring what was the matter? Before I could explain the situation to her, Windsor stepped in through the open window. H had heard Topcliffe's shouts in the garden below, and naturally wanted to ascertain what had passed in his abseuce, before exposing the priest to the darger of losing bi life, and that perhaps uselessly. Just as Windsor entered, I heard voices cutside the door ; Uncle Remy, Basthy, Babington and others were asking"Topcliffe what he was thinking of, to make such an it. fernal noise close to the chamber where a man lay dying. In answer to his rejoindsr Uncle Remy was heard to bid him for God's sake be quiet, and search should be made for the missing key.
