Sordid Tale of Love and Tragedy.

Renowned Violinist Shoots His Wife and Then Ends His Own Life.

New York, May 3.—Playing the Miserere from "Il Trovatore" to a company of diners, who encircled him repeatedly, while the body of his wife, whom he had slain, was concealed in his apartment, Albert De Brahms, a violinist and orchestra leader, widely known here and in Paris, decided on Sunday night the details of the method by which he intended to dispose of her body.

Then, when discovery of his crime seemed about to be made by his gray haired mother, one of the innocent causes of the tragedy, he sent the aged woman away from his apartment at No. 229 West Thirty-fifth street, at noon, ran into a rear bedroom and hanged and shot himself. Within two minutes after DeBrahms dies a new trunk, in which the police are convinced the murderer intended to ship his wife's body out of the city, was delivered at his home and the double crime was revealed.

From the stories gathered by the police from other tenants in the house and from musicians with whom De Brahms had been associated Acting Captain Cooney and the other policemen from the West Thirty-seventh street station who investigated the murder and suicide, decided that the motive for the killings sprang from the almost insane jealousy the couple displayed toward each other. They held no doubt last night that Mrs. De Brahms, whose beauty since she lived there attracted the attention of other tenants in the house, must have been killed early Saturday morning, probably before daylight. De Brahms slept in the house that night and again after returning from his work early yesterday morning.

Since the restaurant was opened three weeks ago, De Brahms had been employed as a violin soloist by Busanoby Brothers, who recently purchased the old Abbaye Restaurant, 43 Thirty-ninth street, near Broadway. It was there that the fervor of the man's playing during Sunday night attracted the attention of the diners to such an extent that several of them threw him money. Before he went to the restaurant, De Brahms had been the leader of the orchestra at the Hotel Knickerbocker.

Thrust Mother Away.

From the restaurant, happy, smiling and joking with the other musicians, De Brahms returned yesterday morning just before two o'clock to the apartment where his wife's body was lying in the bathroom. The disturbed bed, the police accepted as proof that he slept there until within an hour or two hours of the time that his crime was discovered. Then his mother, Mrs. Caroline De Brahms, of No. 339 Fifth Union Hill, N. J., arrived to visit him, but her son, nervous and agitated, thrust her quickly back into the hallway and pleaded with her not to enter the apartment. Finally she went away, to learn of the death of her son and daughter-in-law four hours later when a reporter found her in her home playing with two children and their toy soldiers.

Between the time his mother left him and the arrival of the trunk the police believe De Brahms prepared a mixture of plaster of paris in which he intended to incase the upper part of the body before he attempted to send it out of the city. He strangled his wife to death, and practically all of the hardened plaster he used was smeared over the neck and shoulders of the dead woman. A strip of cloth was tied tightly around her neck.

The trunk was brought to the house by Leo Gilmartin, eighteen years old, of No. 277 Warren Street, Brooklyn. He is employed by the Schwartz Trunk and Leather Company in West Forty-second Street.

Wanted "Longest Trunk."

The police learned that De Brahms went to that store on Saturday afternoon and purchased the trunk. He laid particular emphasis upon the fact that he "wanted the longest thing" he could buy. He paid for the trunk before he left the store and stipulated that it should be delivered to him at the Thirty-fifth Street address yesterday "between ten o'clock in the morning and noon."

Carrying the trunk, Gilmartin entered the elevator in the apartment house, and was taken to the seventh floor by Charles Hazzard, a negro elevator boy. Hazzard opened the elevator door and the trunk was lifted into the hallway. The door leading into the apartment is directly opposite the elevator opening, and Gilmartin and Hazzard saw at the same instant a white envelope that had been pushed halfway out beneath the apartment door into the hallway.

Hazzard picked the note up. It was addressed to him and he opened it. A five dollar bill fluttered to the floor. Hazzard read in the note directions to call a telephone number and inform De Brahms "boss" that he would not appear for work that day. Then followed instructions to the elevator boy to use the money in having a good time.

The constant quarrelling that was the outgrowth of Mrs. De Brahms jealousy of her husband had made other tenants on the same floor interested in them, and when she heard Hazzard and Gilmartin talking in the hallway Mrs. Julia Gressler went to where they were standing. As she approached Hazzard said he did not think everything in the De Brahms apartment was as it should be, and asked Gilmartin to go for a policeman. Their knocking at the apartment door had elicited no response. Hazzard took Gilmartin to the ground floor in the elevator. While the boy who brought the trunk went in search of a policeman, Hazzard followed the directions in the note he had found and learned that the telephone call was that of the restaurant where De Brahms was employed.

In the meantime Mrs. Gressler kept knocking on the door to the De Brahms apartment. She was about to give up her efforts to arouse anyone, when, trying the knob again the door gave way. It had been locked when she tried to open it a moment before. The woman walked into the private hallway and caught sight of a shadowy figure disappearing at the far end as she reached a point opposite the door to the bathroom. She stopped quickly. As she turned her head and looked into the bathroom she saw Mrs. De Brahms' body with a shawl placed over it on the floor. Mrs. Gressler screamed and ran out of the apartment.

Several other tenants heard the cry and they entered the apartment a few minutes before the police arrived with Gilmartin. They searched the other rooms without success until they reached the rear of the apartment. There, in a small wardrobe opening from a bedroom, they found De Brahms' body. He had taken a stout rope, formed a noose about his neck and tied the other end to a hook in the wall. Doubling his feet up under, he was slowly strangling as he placed a small automatic revolver in his mouth and fired a shot.

De Brahms' Note Tells Story.

How Mrs. De Brahms met her death remained a mystery until the police searched the apartment. Then they found a letter addressed to "My Friends and the Officers of the Law." It said:—

"I was too miserable since I was married. My wife made me the most miserable man in the world. She

Chest Pains of Bronchitis

PASSED CAPE RACE.—The barq. Nellie Louise, Capt. M. Burke, passed Cape Race at 5 o'clock last evening. The Nellie-Louise is 23 days out from Barbadoes and has a cargo of molasses for Bowring Bros. Owing to the strong gale that raged from the N. E. last evening and the numerous icebergs in the vicinity of the Cape the vessel came along slowly.

Vessels Arrive.

A few crafts of the Cape fleet reached Placentia yesterday with good catches, but would have done better if they had an ample supply of bait. They were fishing on Cape St. Mary's grounds and found cod plentiful but the weather was stormy, after rebaiting at Placentia the schooners will resume operations.

Ice in Straits.

The S. S. Home, Capt. Harbin, arrived at Bay of Islands at 3.45 p.m. yesterday, being unable to get beyond Port Saunders owing to the ice blockade in the Straits. Capt. Harbin reports as follows:—

"Reached within twelve miles of Port Saunders which is blocked with ice; ice in to Table Point; heavy gales of northerly winds with snow; weather winter like."
