THE MAN I PITY.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

There is a certain man—a class, I mean, not an individual, whom I pity with all my heart because of the way his wife treats him. I do not mean that she is actively unkind to him, on the contrary she is often most solicitous for his welfare and doubtless loves him as well as she knows how and would do anything for him. That is, anything except one thing. And the one thing which she would not do for him is to listen intelligently when he talks of things outside her immediate interests, especially his business.

He feels as if he must have someone to understand.

He tells her about something that happened in the office, explaining carefully what this man said and that man answered. He is full of it and feels that he simply must have someone understand it all.

Her response at the end is to say absently "Did you really?" and then with animation, "John, do you remember that cousin of mine who etc., etc." She might just as well have said, "I didn't listen to a word you were saying. I was thinking my own thoughts and waiting for you to get through."

Like a Blanket Soaked in Ice Water.

Or perhaps her husband touches on something she has heard before and with all the cordiality of a blanket soaked in ice water she says, "Yes, you told me all about that before."

The vacant, abstracted look which this type of wife will wear while her husband is talking about such subjects ought to be a sufficient warning but he hopes so persistently for the sympathy and understanding that he all craves that he is not as quick to heed it as he would otherwise be. He just can't believe that he has married a blank wall as far as interest in his interests goes.

The Punishment For Uninterest.

One sometimes hears wives complaining because their husbands don't tell them about their business interests. And one sometimes wonders if these wives ever were that look of blank unrest when the husbands did try to tell them.

There has been much said about the woman who keeps her husband's love. I have one more guess to hazard—that the husband of a wife who does not throw off her habit of listening to him intelligently as soon as they are married, but still tries her best to understand and sympathize and respond, will not go about looking for an affinity.

Last Port "Made" by Pelorous Jack.

Faithful Pilot Fish Succumbs to Old Age and Grief for Absent Friends.

News has been received from Australia that Pelorous Jack was dead. The famous New Zealand pilot-fish that convoyed steamships from Wellington to Nelson at a point near French Pass for the last thirty-five years. According to Ben Ruddle, the tarry-handed, bronzed, and bearded bosun of a British freighter, the dinky pilot died from the infirmities of old age aggravated by grief over the war.

"I knew Pelorous Jack back in 1886," said Ben Ruddle, "when I was bosun of the old Wangatiki, running between Australia and New Zealand, and he was a smart young dolphin, dazzling blue and white in color and about fourteen feet long. In those days Jack, as the fish was known by all men in the coasting deep-water trade to New Zealand, could swim like a streak, and moved so fast that when the sun was shining strong all the officers on the bridge and lookout forward could see a flash as he jumped out of the water ahead to show his dexterity.

"Jack always kept on the starboard bow, as he knew that was the captain's side of the ship, and was a regular nautical aristocrat in manner. Skippers who followed Pelorous Jack never reported on any shoals or hit rocks, and this became so well known that many of the older mariners would not go through French Pass unless he was ready to pilot them. They all took a delight in feeding him with pieces of beef and small fresh loaves, which Jack had a great fondness for. One of his best friends was Captain Inman R. Sealy of the White Star Line, who afterward had the Republic, and the two were so chummy that Jack would miss two or three vessels when he knew that Sealy was about to leave Wellington for Nelson.

"In 1904 some young landlubber, with more money than sense, came along in his yacht and fired a shot at the old pilot fish as he came under the bow and knocked a chunk off his starboard fin. This cruel act upset Pelorous Jack so much he swam away and was not seen for three months, and many of the coast skippers believed that he had given up his job. Finally the New Zealand Government sent a dispatch boat to look for him and Jack was discovered hiding up a small inlet in a lonesome state and brought back to French Pass. To protect him from further attacks the Governor of New Zealand issued a special Order in Council establishing a fine of $500 for any person who attempted to injure Pelorous Jack.

"Just before the war began it was noticed that the famous dolphin was turning gray and was showing his age in other ways. He took on a shovel-nosed whistling grampus called Billy to teach him the pilot business, but Billy had lost his port headlight and had to carry so much starboard helm that he was continually going around. Then Jack got hold of a frisky young dugong named Wiffin, which indulged in so much skylarking around the ships that the officers would not trust him, and the sailors used to chuck coal at him to chase him away.

"With his age and sciatrics, in the part which wagged his tail, and missing all his old friends who had been called away to the Atlantic trade by the war, Pelorous Jack just plain away and died. His body was found about two months ago on the sandy shore near French Pass, and out of respect for his long and faithful services the crew of a coast steamer dug a trench and put the body of the old dinky pilot in it on a bed of seaweed and planted a blue gum tree at the head and tail to mark the spot."

Ben Ruddle, who seemed much affected by the death of Pelorous Jack said that after the war the officers and men in Australia and New Zealand coast trade would take up a collection for a monument to the only fish ever known to have been honored by a special Order-in-Council.

Charge It to the Kaiser

(Financial America.) Every time you pay three cents, as you will be doing before long, for postage of a letter that formerly went for two charge the difference to the Kaiser.

Every time you have a reminder that this war is costing you something, charge it to the Kaiser.

You will have many reminders. There will be increased taxes on incomes, on cigars, on liquors, on gasoline, on a hundred and one different things.

But pay without grudging, without complaint. Pay cheerfully, blithely, graciously, thankfully. You will be paying that you may be free, that your children and your children's children may be free.

You will be paying that democracy shall not wither from the earth.

Your Boys and Girls.

Nothing is more important to a child's physical well being than proper assimilation of food and in order to masticate the food, good teeth are necessary. As the teeth grow they should be watched closely and brushed each night and morning. Should the first teeth show signs of decay the child should be taken to a dentist for advice.

Brown bread should be given children. They require it for the formation of bones and teeth, as it contains phosphates of wheat. In early childhood the teeth should be cleaned with a good dental preparation or castile soap, using a cloth sponge to apply same. The bristles of an ordinary brush are too stiff and apt to injure the delicate gums.

OUR NAVY.

In his leaking wooden boat, Jones, the hero, got the goat, of the strongest ship afloat, long ago; Lawrence and De-catur, too, on the wide and heaving blue, sent a thrill of panic through every foe. There was Perry, of the lakes, who could whip his weight in snakes; his career a record makes proud and high; Dewey sailed Manila Bay, and his seamen heard him say, "From the foe we'll knock the whey, or we'll die." Since this nation had its birth all the countries of the earth know the character and worth of our ships; knew the fighters of our fleet never would command retreat, never would admit defeat or eclipse. Once again they sail the brine, with a purpose high and fine, to dispute the "right divine" of Red Bill; of a slayer who has dyed Europe's landscape; fat and wild with man's blood, who takes a pride in his skill. Harder, fiercer will they fight, now that they defend the right 'gainst the crazy butcher's might, on the wave; so we send these hero souls where the mystic ocean rolls; write their names upon the scrolls of the brave.

If the top of the stove is too full there are many things that will stew as well in the oven. Rhubarb, for instance, is delicious when cooked in the oven.
