Traced His Money to the Hands of Lawyer Who Paid it to Police Inspectors

New York, Aug. 12,-That William P. Burns, the famous detective, had actually been operating a gambling house, and had fitted up two disorderly houses in the Tenderloin, had paid for police protection, and then traced his money to the hands of the lawyer who distributed it to two police inspectors and a lieutenant, is the report that District Attorney Whitman this morning, when asked about the published statement, declared he did not believe there was any truth in it. However, the report was given credence in circles close to the investigators.

Police collectors, it was stated, visit ed the places as soon as they had been opened, and, in the presence of stenog raphers hidden away, received mone for permission to run. The money was found in banks, through the numbers on the bills, and in this way i was learned that the lawyer to whom the collectors had taken the money had made the deposits. Then, it was stated, a complete case

New York, Aug. 12 - District Attorney Whitman is bending every effort today to secure the identifications of 'Whitey" Lewis and "Dago Frank' Cirofici as two of the gunmen who ocupied the murder car on the night hat Gambler Homan Rosenthal was shot down and slain. William Shapiro, the chauffeur of he car, after looking the two suspects er trembling, told the public proseator that he could not identify them Shapiro seemed frightened at the sight f the two suspects. The chauffeu vill be given an opportunity later to dentify the two men. With the lengthy written confession of "Bald Jack" Rose as a basis, pri-vate detectives went to work today to secure corroboration of the story which Rose told in detail of his alleged relations with Police Lieutenant Becker as a collector of blackmail. Rose gave the names of ten or more gamblers from whom, he said, he col-ected graft. The detectives believe that important corroboration can be obtained not only from these gamblers, out from members of Rose's household, who, Rose says, saw him give money
