"Why, what on earth d'you mean?" sharply demanded Mrs. Gass. "Saw Mrs. Rane's ghost! Don't be an idiot, Jelly. "Yes, I saw it," repeated Jelly, with quiet emphasis. "Saw it as sure as I see them standing there now to bury her. There could be no mistake. I never saw her plainer in life. It was at one o'clock in the morning, I say, Mrs. Gass; and she was screwed down at twelve; an hour before

"Had you taken a little too much beer?" asked Mrs. Gass, after a pause, staring at Jelly to make sure the question would not also apply to the present time. But the face that met hers was strangely earnest; too much so even to resent the insinuation. "It was her ghost, poor thing; and I'm afraid it'll walk till justice lays it. I never knew but one ghost walk in all my life, Mrs. Gass; and he had been murdered." Mrs. Gass made no rejoinder. She was absorbed in looking at Jelly. Jelly went

"It's said there's many that walk: the world's full of such tales; but I never knew but that one. When people are put to an intimely end, and buried away out of sight, and their secrets with 'em, it stands to reason that they can't rest quiet in their graves. She won't."

Mrs. Gass put her hand impressively on Jelly's black shawl, and kept it there. "Tell me why you are saying this?" "It's what I want to do. If I don't tell is to some one, I shall soon be in the grave myself. Fancy me living at the very next door, and nobody in the house just now but Not at the charge; she didn't believe aword of it; but at Jelly's presuming to imagine it. She gave Jelly a serious reprimand.

"It was him that wrote that anonymous letter, you know," whispered Jeliy.
"Hush! Hold your tongue, girl. I've warned you before to let that alone." "And I'm willing to do so.

"That is downright wicked of you, Jelly. Dr. Rane loved his wife. What motive do vou suppose he could have had for killing sumption. I spent nearly $300, and was aer."
"To get the tontine money," replied Jelly,

The two woman gazed at each other; gaze meeting gaze. And then Mrs. Gass suddenly grew whiter than Dr. Rane, and began to shiver as though some strange chill had

CHAPTER XVII.

Realining on the pillows of an invalid thair was Arthur Bohun, tooking as yellow is gold, recovering from an attack of jaundice. The day of James Bohun's funeral it had poured with rain; and Arthur, standing at the grave, had caught a chill. This had terminated in the jaundice-his unhappy state of mind no doubt doing it's part towards bringing on the malady. He was recovering now. Sir Nash, at whose house he lay, was everything that was kind.

Madam was kind also; at least she made a great profession of being so. Her object life just now was to get her son to marry Miss Dallory. Madam cared no more for her son Arthur or his welfare than she did for Richard North; but she was shrewd enough to foresee that the source, whence her large supplies of money had hitherto seen drawn, was now dried up: and she hoped to get supplies out of Arthur for the future. Marrying an heiress, wealthy as Miss Dallory, would wonderfully increase his power to help her. Moreover, she wished to be effectually relieved from that aorrible nightmare that haunted her stillthe possibility of his marrying Ellen Adair. So madam laid her plans—as it was in her scheming nature ever to be laying them-and contrived to bring Miss Dallory, at that time in London with her aunt, to Sir Nash Bohun's for a few days' visit when Arthur was recovering. The young lady was there now; and Matilda North was there; and they both spent a good part of every day with Arthur; and Sir Nash made much of Mary Dallory, partly because he thought there was a probability that she would become Arthur's wife. During his illness, Captain Bohun had had time for reflection; not only time, but calmness, in the lassitude it brought to him mentally and physically; and he began to see his mmediate way somewhat clearer. To give no explanation to the two ladies at Eastsea, to whom he was acting, as he felt, so base a part, was the very worst form of cowardice; and, though he could not explain to Ellen Adair, he was now anxious o do so to Mrs. Cumberland. Accordingly the first use he made of his partial y-re-covered health, was to ask for writing materials and write her a note in very shaky characters. He spoke of his serious ilness, stated that certain "untoward circumstances" had occurred to intercept his plans, but that as soon as he was sufficiently well to travel he should beg of her to appoint a time when she could allow him a private conference.

The return post brought him a letter from Ellen. Rather to his consternation. Ellen a sumed-not unnaturally, as the reader will find—that the sole cause of his mysterious exceeding promptness in relieving pain in absence was illness; that he had been ill the bladder, kidneys, back and every part from the first, and unable to travel. It ran of the urinary passages in male or female. follows:-

Oh I cannot tell you what the past two or three weeks have been to ane; looking back, it almost seems a wonder that I lived through them. For I thought-I will not say here what I thought, and perhaps I could not say, only that you were never coming again: and that was agony to me, worse than death. And to hear now

And Captain Arthur Bohun, in spite of "Consider how ill he has been-and is,"

Mrs. Cumberland's span of life was drawing into a very narrow space; and it might he that she was beginning to suspect this.

For some months she had been growing inwardly weaker; but the weakness had for a week or two been visibly and rapidly increasing. Captain Bohun's unaccountable behaviour had tried her—for Ellen's sake. She was responsible to Mr. Adair for the welfare of his daughter, and the matter was a source of daily and hourly annoyance to her. When this second tardy note arrived, she considered it, in one sense, a satisfactory explanation; in another, not so:

since, if Captain Bohun had been too ill to write himself, why did he not get some one else to write to her and say so? However, she was willing to persuade herself that all would be right; and she told Ellen, without showing her the note, that Captain Bohun had been dangerously ill, unable to come or

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Fisher. Alfred street, Brantford, mourn the loss of their bright little daughter, Sarah Ethel, at the age of 7 years. The direct cause of the death was an unfortunate accident which happened on Tuesday last. The deceased was playing with a brother on that day, and while engaged in rombing around, she had a button in her mouth. In throwing her head backwards to escape some water which was tossed at her by her brother, the button slipped in her mouth and lodged in the windpipe. A physician was at once called, but failed to locate the button or give any relief to the little girl who was suffering, and subsequently three city physicians in consultation could not locate the foreign article. The girl suffered great pain in try ing to breathe, but passed through all right until Thursday night when she died.

W. J. frimming the diseased branches of a Bracebridge, Ont., writes, as have thoustree will not preserve the tree when disease is located at the roots. Preservation remedy has failed, Suth American Nerrests in applying a remedy to the roots. Disease with man has its seat in the nerve centers of the body, which are located at the base of the brain. From these points come the life fluid that gives force, energy, and healthfulness to every other part of the system. Pain may be caused by a disordered stomach; weakness is often the result of overworked nerves. A thousand and one articlee may be found on the apothecary's shelves that will give present relief in such cases, but none will cure. A remedy that can create healthfulness at | ment, having found that from the first few the nerve centers gives prompt restoration to the point immediately diseased.
