Australasians, the Doctor says, like us as Canadians, but they love us as British Columbians, and this special friendship is due directly to the manner in which the Australasian commissioners were entertained while here a few years ago. There is only one hotel throughout the whole of Australia which the Driard does not surpass-and that is located in Sydney. Dr. Hanington travelled at ease all over the continent, and naturally among the things that interested him most were the hospitals, few of which he missed visiting. The people he found all desirous of securing confederation, but, as he explained to many of them, they had not a Sir John A. Macdonald to bring it about. Their open-handed hospitality was everywhere evidenced,
