meet me at the depot, if she has sent any address."

"The address is the lawyers' who arranged her legacy for her, and who did not live in the burnt district. Morse & Hunter."

A few days later, as fast as steam would carry Walter to Chicago and back, Elsie was waiting to welcome the travelers. A telegram had informed her that Walter had found Aunt Julia waiting at the depot, and by what train to expect him home. The only spare room in the pretty little house at Harlem, where Walter had brought his bride, was in Jainty order. Jennie, the servant, was cooking the choicest supper Elsie could devise, and the little wife herself, neatly dressed, was running to the door every minute watching for the carriage.

"Un meld you came," she whispered, "I am glad you came," she whispered. "I am glad you came, "she white fast in Elsie's.

"What I have done." Walter said, his heart swelling with endion, "was gladly, lovingly done. I do not need thanks, Aunt Julia."

was waiting to welcome that Walter had found aunt Julia waiting at the department. The only spare room in the pretty little house at Harlem, where Walter had brought his bride, was in Jainty order. Jennie, the servant, was cooking the choicest supper Eldie could devise, and the little wite herself, neatly dressed, was running to the door every minute watching for the carriage.

It came at last, and Walter handed out a lady. Poor Elsie felt fairly sick, as the guest tottered rather than walked into the room. She was white as ashes, her hair, Elsie remembered black as coal not one has watching for the carriage. She was shaby dress was most unified ears, her shabby dress was most unified ears, her shabby dress was most unified and Julia's habitual noakness. But the first shock of surprise over. Elsie had no words too loving to welcome her aun, while solt, tender kisses fell fast upon the pale face.

So Elsie, tearfully loving, made her aunt lie upon the lounge, and brought her the manuface of team words. "Get her to rest, dear, as soon as you can."

So Elsie, tearfully loving, made her aunt lie upon the lounge, and brought her the most tempting of teat-tays, atopping the broken words of thanks by kisses and caresses. Watter, too, by a hundred delicate tempting of teat-tays, atopping the broken words of thanks by kisses and caresses. Watter, too, by a bundred delicate attentions and few spoken words made the guest feel that the was most co-dilly and gladly welcomed.

In her own room Aunt Julia told Eleie something of the horrors that had aged her more in one fortnight than in any previous years of her life. She had slept upon the ground in a drenching rain for two nights, then in a tent with no change of clothing, and the memory of the fire ter-rors to haunt her. She had begged the paper and the rtamp to write to Elsie. Then she told of Walter's tender care of her in the long jeurney, when she, racked by pain, often could not speak for hours, 'unfortunate investment' of her friend's how like a son he had cared for her com fort. It was a sad story, and Elsie's tears

posure, while the tortured brain, in wilder at delirium, raved of scenes that chilled Elsie with a rror.

All through these weary weeks Elsie was nurse, while Walter supplied every delicacy that could be found to tempt the invalid. patiently endured the discomforts of a house haunted by sickness and proved himself, Jennie declared, "the nearest to an angel of a man ever she seed."

Winter was nearly over before Aunt Julia was able to leave her bed, crippled for life. The rheumatism had so twisted the joints of her hands, legs and feet, that they were useless and most of the time intensely painful. She fretted over the prospect of being a burden upon Walter and Elsie, with all the despair of a great woman who had always maintained har own independence, and tearfully begged to be sent to some charitable asylum, where she would be only a public expense. Elsie told Walter of this wish, and he went to Aunt Julia's room.

fort. It was a sad story, and Elsie's tears fell fast.

"But now," she said, "you are at home. I have put underclothes and loose wrappers in here, auntie, until we can have some dresses fitted. Let me undress you now."

Gently and tenderly the shabby clothes were removed, the weary feet bathed, the gray atreaked hair smoothed, and snowy linen put on for the night. Then, utterly tired, Aunt Julia sank into the bed, whispering:

"Think E' is I have not been in a bed for twelve nights!"

But, alsa, one was not soon to leave it. The haven of rest once gained, Aunt Julia lay for many long weeks dangerously ill with rheumatic fever brought on by exposure, while the tortured brain, in wildeat delirium, raved of scenes that chilled Elsie with h rror.
