A BISHOP SPEAKS OUT.

The Bishop of Liechfield has been long in favor of the Church of England Temperance Society, and many will speak with the great moderation his ship exhibited whilst discussing the question of making England sober. The Bishop has no faith, apparently, in the idea that it will be possible to accomplish by Act of Parliament. Indeed, those who were listening to him to rely so much on what he described as the "straw of the law," but rather to rely on themselves to do the best they could for themselves, and in this advice he certainly is a good deal of common sense. The evil of drinking lies not so much in its use, as in its abuse, and bearing in mind the great mass of people in this country who are moderate drinkers, it will be difficult to restrict their liberty by the attempt to punish those whose intemperance has developed into a venial license. The Bishop of Liechfield contends—if we understand him rightly—that people must, in a great measure, work out their own salvation, not expecting much help from the State. The force of example is a powerful ally to the end, and education ought to be a factor in the case. The moderate but faithful address is to the careful consideration which it should receive.—English Exchange.
