MISSION SCHOOLS. "GOING HOME!"

We were reading the other day, an account of the establishment of Missionary Sabbath Schools, in Philadelphia, which interested us much. It is a kind of work, in which so many may take part, and from which so much good may result. In Hamilton, Kingston and Montreal, there are already such schools connected with our church, and there must be many other places, where there is room for such efforts. In such schools, attached to a single congregation "the Calvary Presbyterian Church" in Philadelphia, there have now been gathered in, in three years, from the highways and byways of a crowded city, 963 scholars—one school commenced two years ago with 69 scholars, now it is attended by 588! The workers in these schools too, have been permitted to see fruit of their labors. They have seen children before ignorant, neglected and uncared for, becoming attentive and growing up to be useful. They have in view, some who in their lives have begun to shew, that they have learned to know the Lord. Some too, of the little ones have been called away. Children you know die as well as the more aged. Church-yards have many graves in them, some shorter than you. And
