A ruined castle, a ghost, a mysterious tower, an American novelist, a wicked count—these are the skillfully mixed ingredients in "A Fool and His Money," a Selznick picture, adapted from the story of George Barr Mc-Cutcheon, which opens today for a two-day engagement at the Grand Opera House.

Eugene O'Brien is the star, and appears as an American best-selling author, who purchases a castle in the Swiss Tyrol. He is regarded as a fool for having made the purchase, but, as it turns out, he gets the best of the bargain after all. He goes through all sorts of exciting and amusing experiences, and wins a charming wife and gets material and "atmosphere" for a record-breaking best-seller.

A rollicking comedy feature from the Paramount-Arteraft studio, starring Al St. John, that funny man of the screen, in his latest and newest comedy success, "Cleaning Up," and he does much to the merriment of the audience. Pathe Topics of the Day will complete the picture features for the next two days.

violinist, who is announced to play here at the Grand Wednesday evening, under the auspices of London Musical Art Society, has succeeded in winning the unanimous praise of his critics wherever he has appeared, especially for his mastery of the music of the great Italian violinist composer, Paganini, music which for the most part is generally regarded as beyond the artistic and technical reach of contemporary violinists. It was in his interpretatistic and technical reach of contemporary violinists. It was in his interpretation of this music in a strange country that Prihoda first received recognition, being at once recognized as an authoritative exponent of the art of Paginini. One of the most brilliant technicians yet to be graduated from the famous Conservatory of Prague, Vasa Prihoda is making his first tour of the principal cities of the United States and Canada under the New York management of Fortunte Gallo, the grand opera impresario. A. D. Jordan Saturday morning received a wire from Fortune Gallo from Elmira, N. Y., in which city Prihoda gave an informal opening concert November 19. The entire house was sold out and selling of seats had to be stopped long befone the time of the concert. Gallo further states that "Prihoda is the greatest living violinist, and after his New York concert tonight at Carnegie Hall will be known the world over. His technique and tone are so great that the words cannot describe it." Seats for his London engagement, the first time in any city outside New York, went on sale this morning. ary violinists. Eve de Merincourt loosened the strap which held her to her seat. Another moment and the bonds which kept her in the midst of life's tragedies would be freed. Circumstances had been too much for Eve, the little convent-bred girl.

Then a sudden tremendous flash and crackle about the frail aircraft. The storm had burst right on them. A splintering roar and one wing of the machine was ripped off like paper.

What happened to Eve and to the repulsive old millionaire who had pursued and finally captured her, using her sense of duty to a bankrupt father as the bait? "Trumpet Island." the wonderful special Vitagraph production, to be shown at the Grand Theatre tells vividly and with smashing dramatic force of what followed.

Eve had always dreamed of the kind of man she wanted to marry—young, handsome, tall—and at last she was to be thrown into his arms—literally—from the clouds. Just how the two tangled lives are straightened out is portrayed with marvelous beauty, daring and speed in "Trumpet Island." a master production, the combination of a great story by a master teller of tales, edited, adapted and directed by out of the war—one which will no doubt appeal to many who witness it. The story is one of a domestic upheaval, following the return of a husband from the front to find his wife so absorbed to the control of the story of the st in war work and women's meetings of every kind that she has no time to devote to him and in consequence he has sought consolation in a pretty Widow.

The situations are vastly entertaining, although there is a hint of impending tragedy which is swept away through the wife's commonsense in realizing before it is too late that her duty to her family comes first. Witty dialogue and kindly, if at times pungent philosophy punctuate the play, and there is a wealth of comedy of the most effective type. Mail orders now. How would you like to be banished to Bogga Billa, in Boorooloola, just because you told your mother you would like to go on the stage. That's what happened to pretty Sylvia Breamer, who plays the girl in Maurice Tourneur's big photoplay. "My Lady's Garter" at Loew's Theatre today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Miss Breamer is an Australian, and lived the early years of her life in Sydney. But when she confided her ambitions to her mother, the good lady was scandalized, and forthwith packed off Sylvia to her uncle's desolate sheep ranch.

Much of the year which it took to make this picture was spent in researches into new photographic inventions, and some idea of the time and thought spent on the picture can be gained from the fact that over 37 miles of film was used up in the making before the finished production of something like 7,000 feet was pronounced completed. A picture which turned disappointed crowds away from capacity audiences at $10 a seat, which later ran for nearly a month at $5 a seat, and still later, in the same New York, played the Capitol for $1, doing capacity business all the time. At Massey Hall, Toronto, it repeated its American popularity, and with seats selling at $1 one had to book far in advance. "Earthbound" is to be shown at the Allen in Toronto this week, as well as at the Allen in London.

"Boggo Billa," says Miss Breamer, "describes it very well. For a time it was fun, watching the men shear the sheep and the natives at their queer dances. But the stage bug was firmly in my bonnet, and soon afterward I ran away and joined a traveling stock company in 'Within the Law.' It was quite a job reconciling my mother, but finally she consented not only to my following the company to America."

In "My Lady's Garter" Miss Breamer has the role of a girl who for a while is nearly forced to believe her sweetheart a notorious criminal, but sees everything cleared up satisfactorily in the end.

A rib-tickling Mack Sennett comedy, with all the Sennett fun-makers, will take care of the laugh end of the bill, while a new Loew's Screen Pictorial of world events in pictures will be specially interesting. "I am for tariff reduction all along the line. I stand for the abolition of protective tariff. I will fight for the little fellow. I must protect those who need it, but I will not protect the big fellow. We must raise revenue and revenue only from customs."

Mr. Chariton said that it would not be possible for Canada to develop free trade for a few years, but he believed that the products of the soil should be sold in the United States on a reciprocal basis. The things needed in Canada but not produced here should be admitted free in exchange for free markets for wheat and dairy products. There would be little danger of the United States flooding our country, because that country had more than ten times the non-producing population that Canada had.

Government Policy.

"In this pamphlet," he continued, "the Government tells you to stand together, and that it is a bad time to experiment in politics. They tell you that in a small by-election while in the last great election they deliberately set Quebec against Ontario, Catholic against Protestant to set up a bastard government. The rump of that government comes to you now for support. They come into the riding with enough organization to carry the county and bring with them this pamphlet filled with political tuberculosis. If their standard is the same now as it was then it is mighty low.

Mr. Chariton bitterly attacked the Government because of the way in whi it financed the war. He claimed that the many loans raised by Sir George Foster were used to pay the running expenses of the Government of making lavish expenditures. If the Government paid off the national debt at a rate no faster than the one set last year it would take 1,166 years to accomplish it.

The speaker said that the claim made by the Government that the high exchange rate was due to the fact that change rate was due to the fact that Canada was buying more in the United States than she was selling is not true. If that was true, he asked why was it not the case before the war. He blamed the condition on the fact that Sir Robert Borden had reduced the amount of silver in Canadian currency from
