Prospects For Ice Out At Curling Rink Looking Up-Postponed St. Thomas Game Tuesday Likely.

No shipwrecked, rum and brine soaked castaway on a desert isle ever sighted a sail with more zest ever sighted a sail with more zest than the Alerts received the news last night that there was every probability of ice at the London Curlers' rink for the game Friday night with Tillsonburg Pan-Prieds. Last night there were seven degrees of frost in the moonlight and five in the shade and if the weatherman behaved that well for several nights, a good surface would be a certainty. certainty.

All the players have had some individual workouts at the Coves, and are in good condition. They have not worked out together, however, but there is a possibility that ice may be available for Thursday night at the rink. If the sheet has to be saved up for Friday because of uncertain weather, then the team will journey down to the Cove Thursday afternoon.

The postponed opening game with St. Thomas will likely be played next Tuesday night if the weather holds out. The dropping out of the juniors gave this open date at the rink, and both the curling management and the Saints are agreeable to having the game played.

The rink should be packed to the rafters Friday night, judging from the impatience of the fans for sight of a hockey game, and the advance sale of seats should bring many shekels to the treasury. Mrs. Quentin Feltner, South Shor
