MR. BOURASSA

The political enemies of Mr. Bourassa in Quebec province have delivered themselves into his hands. They have mobbed him, in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's constituency of Quebec East, and have thus aroused for him a sympathy which might otherwise have been less pronounced. It is a poor cause that cannot bear discussion, and the denial of the right of free speech is regarded, whether rightly or wrongly, as a confession of weakness.

The political pot in Quebec province has been gradually getting up to boiling point, and from this time forward there will be an exciting contest. Messrs. Bourassa and Lavergne are not men to be daunted by stones and stale eggs. The treatment they received yesterday will make them the more determined to say what they have to say concerning conditions now existing in provincial politics in Quebec, and their words will command the more attention from thoughtful people because of this disgraceful attempt to intimidate them.

Of course the somewhat volatile nature of our French-Canadian fellow citizens renders a political campaign more exciting in Quebec than in the other provinces. The writer remembers very well a meeting held by the conservatives in Montreal in 1891, which was almost broken up by a compact body of young disturbers, who afterwards marched away to serenade the Hon. Mr. Mercier. The incident was not seriously regarded, and the Conservatives gained the ascendancy in the province at that time. Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Lavergne in their turn will gain prestige from the nature of the forces opposed to them in Quebec East. The provincial government is forced into the humiliating attitude of being compelled to apologise for the attempt of its followers to prevent free speech.

POLITICAL MATTERS

There is a more lively general interest in politics in New Brunswick at the present time than has been manifested at any time when an election was not at hand for many years past. It is realised, as this paper pointed out yesterday, that certain strong and commanding influences have in recent years been withdrawn from the provincial field, and that the time is opportune for a return to first principles. The province is a little weary of deals and devices, and a little eager to have the assurance of a sound business administration, whatever party may be in power. Hence there is, wherever men come together, an interested discussion of local politics and the merits of this or that aspirant for cabinet position.

This is a healthy and promising state of affairs. It may not suit the organ of this or that politician or party, but it is in the best interests of the province. Some newspapers have descended to petty personalities and a policy of misrepresentation which reveals them in their true light, not as independent leaders of public opinion, but as mere party hacks. Theirs is a waning influence.

It took the people of the United States twenty-five years to get declared in the courts what most people believed about the depredations of Standard Oil. It takes a long time also to expose and overcome sinister influences entrenched in the politics of a country or a province; but in the end the people are aroused and convinced, and higher standards of political morality must be established.

MARITIME UNION

The people of Prince Edward Island are not partial to maritime union. They say they want a fulfilment of the pledges made when they entered the larger union before they will be disposed to consider the smaller one. One of their delegates made this point very clear at the meeting of the maritime board of trade in Amherst last summer. The Charlotte town Guardian now repeats this statement. We quote:—"Prince Edward Island is not yet ready, and certainly will not be until we get an all-rail connection." The Guardian, with a cheerful sense of irresponsibility, would be quite willing to see New Brunswick unite with Nova Scotia, although "the larger partner would have complete legislative control by right of superior numbers." And it adds:

"In the meantime a happy and prosperous Acadia, made up of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with the latching string always out for us, might cause the island to gravitate more strongly in that direction than is at present apparent. By all means let Nova Scotia and New Brunswick be united. It is said that union would diminish the cost of government and increase the prestige and importance of the united provinces as well as their weight in the councils of Canada. These are considerations not to be despised. Prince Edward Island would not stand in the way of the sister provinces making such gains immediately and on the contrary would rejoice in their good fortune when realized. Moreover the legislative union of those provinces might induce them to heartily endorse and urge forward the tunnel project, thus preparing the way for our favorable consideration of joining the happy maritime hosiery hold, should our people so decide later. The Guardian will cheerfully lend its support to the early union of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, always provided that the people of those communities really desire to come together and can do so without a repetition of the anti-union kicking of forty years ago."

There is very little reason to fear that the larger voting power of Nova Scotia would affect New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island interests in the event of union. Certain matters of importance would have to be settled before the union was effected, and thereafter there could be very little serious friction. In a general way the interests of the three provinces are identical, and they have far more to draw them together than to keep them apart. Nevertheless, the feeling in Prince Edward Island, which would urge better means of communication with the other provinces in advance of union cannot be regarded without a considerable degree of sympathy in these provinces.

Mr. James Lowell and the Fairville firemen are to be congratulated on their successful efforts to provide a large playground for that suburb on which not only men but the boys of the place may indulge in healthful athletic sports. Anything that tends to develop the physical side of the young men of a community is to be commended, not less than agencies which make for intellectual and moral culture. The scheme described in today's Times should be heartily and generally supported.

The venerable Dr. Sawyer, former president of Acadia University, whose death is announced today, was a man of great learning and high character. He guided the destinies of the University with great success for many years, and received many evidences of high esteem from the Baptist people of the province. He did much for the advancement of education in these provinces, and is held kindly memory by many students now themselves getting on toward middle life.

The brethren are still at variance. Referring to the Globe the Fredericton Herald says: "The Globe, however, cannot forego the opportunity of trying to injure the credit of the province. The Globe is old enough to know better. It has been at that kind of work for half a century, but the province has gone on increasing in wealth and prosperity under British institutions."

The result of the normal school examinations shows that there will be a large addition to the teaching staff of the province, but the scarcity of teachers has been such, coupled with the movement westward, that there should be no difficulty in providing all the candidates with positions.

The beginning of the end in Morocco is recorded in today's despatches. The fanatical tribesmen will be subdued, and the effective policing of the coast will be attended to. What the Algiers conference provided for has been hastened by the tribesmen themselves.

Another imperial link will be forged by the building of the proposed government railway in Nigeria. Canadians will be glad to know that the work is to be done under the eye of the eminent Canadian engineer, Sir Percy Girouard.

Commander Peary is a dauntless navigator. The world will hope that since he is going north again he will get nearer the goal of his ambition than in former voyages.

EARLY MORNING

When steals the gloom of early morn,
Sweet tincturing the eastern sky,
With colors from Aurora's brush,
Brighter than gold or Tyrian dye.

The balmy breeze with scented breath,
All freighted with the song of birds,
Low whispers from the leafy bower,
And lowing of the distant herds.

Through ambient air the sunshine's touch
Rouses from sleep the drowsy earth,
While nodding flowers obedience make,
And with sweet incense greet its birth.

On river's bank the lily sweet
Drinks fragrance from the mountain stream,
Whose fashing waters wildly leap,
Bathed in the sunshine's vital gleam.

The pale mists on the distant hills,
Reluctant leave their ancient seat
As, coy and shy, they fade away
Before the morning's tripping feet.

A wealth of beauty floods the sky,
A wealth of fragrance fills the air,
And nature, gladdened, lifts her voice
To banish darkness and despair.

WRONG KIND OF GLASS.

(London Teller.)
He was a young and smart looking Scotchman, and was to preach a "trial" sermon in a strange church. Fearing that his hair might be disarranged or that he might have a smudge on his face, he quietly and significantly said to the headle, there being no mirror in the vestry.

"John, could you get me a glass?"
John disappeared, and after a few minutes returned with something which he cast, which, to the astonishment of the divine, he produced in the form of a bottle with a gilt of whisky in it, saying: "Ye mauna let on a scotch it, minister, for I got it as a special favor, and I wadna hae got it ava if I hadna told them it was for you."

THE BEST MEDIUM

(Boston Herald.)

The Baltimore Sun quotes from a prominent shoe manufacturer of this state, who it says "in the last ten years has spent $2,000,000 in advertising," as strongly supporting the contention that newspapers are very best advertising medium.

This manufacturer found such good results in advertising in the newspapers many years ago that he has twice tried the magazines. "The returns did not warrant my continuing," he says. The reasons which he gives for his preference are simple, but convincing.

A newspaper advertisement strikes the eye the moment the sheet is opened. The same advertisement would lie hidden among the pages of a magazine until the reader found his way to it, if he ever did.

Practically every man reads a newspaper. Every man does not read magazines. Take a village, for instance, where the one local newspaper has perhaps 200 readers. If I put an advertisement in that paper, 200 people are going to see it. No one magazine, not for that matter, all the magazines combined, will circulate 200 copies in that same town. The reasoning is very simple.

Another excellent reason for the superiority of newspaper over magazine advertising rests in the fact that in those same local papers the reader sees the "ad" every day of his life, while he sees it, at best, only once a month in a magazine.

The Sun adds these conclusive reasons from its own viewpoint and experience: The daily newspaper is a record not only of happenings in all parts of the world, but it gives special attention to its own field—to the events in the city in which it is published. It voices the sentiment of the community in which it is an influence. It speaks before its readers every 24 hours a complete record of the life of that community. It is read because it is a necessity. Intelligent men and women cannot do without it. When, in addition, it possesses influence and high standing, those qualities give special value to its advertisements. For this reason it is the most desirable of advertising mediums.

WHAT IT COSTS TO SWEAR

BY A "HOLY MACKEREL"

MUSKOGON, Mich., Aug. 5.—A jury has given Mrs. Jennie Webb a verdict for $150 against Mrs. Lawrence Dewey, of Detroit, whose cook and general servant she was at the Dewey summer home at Lake Harbor. Mrs. Webb alleged that Mrs. Dewey engaged her as a servant until October 1 and discharged her at the end of the first week. She asked for $500 for breach of contract. She alleged that Mrs. Dewey insisted on her doing hard manual work, and that when she rebelled the lady of the house rebuked her, using the words, "Holy mackerel."
