"BUSINESS FIRST" TOWN PLANNING

Frills Must Come Last, Says Speaker to Montreal Canadian Club

Healthy Conditions to Increase Human Efficiency Primary Consideration in His Argument

(Montreal Gazette)

An argument for the union of French architectural genius with the British ideas of health and sanitary housing conditions for city planning was made yesterday by Thomas Adams, of the Commission of Conservation, Ottawa, at the Windsor Hotel. Mr. Adams, who has been appointed by the Conservation Commission to lend his energies in the advancement of the city planning idea, gave an interesting address, dealing especially with the problems affecting the growth of Montreal.

Dean Adams, of McGill University, took the chair, as president of the club, and in opening the meeting made reference to the reported death in action of Capt. D. O. C. Newton, of the Princess Patricia's. This, he said, was the first member of the Montreal Canadian Club who had fallen a victim to the war, and his death would be regretted by many who remembered him as a charming gentleman and a fine soldier.

Thos. Adams, in opening his address, said that town planning and housing were often regarded as two separate problems, the idea of town and city planning being taken as merely planning for a city beautiful, while it should include the whole question of the city's life and growth.

The first question in a city's development was its business, and the most vital point in that was the human factor, so that healthy conditions for the working population were a fundamental principle of town planning. The question was whether to consider the fills of architectural and scenic beauty or the essential things pertaining to civic health and the keeping down of preventable disease.

Frills Come Last

Taken in order, Mr. Adams laid down the following line of development: first, business; second, health; third, living conditions; fourth, transportation facilities, as necessary to both the former; fourth, market and food supply; fifth, education; sixth, recreation, including a park system and recreation places; and lastly the civic centre and monumental buildings. The foundation of a city was the healthy workshop and home, the coping stone the civic centre and fine buildings.

Montreal, he said, had a magnificent site, but definite plans were required for future development in order to avoid the mistakes of the past. In 1881 only 18 per cent of Canada's population was urban; today over 80 per cent, lived in towns and cities. Between 1901 and 1891 there had been 4,698 industrial establishments created in the Dominion, while in the latter year some $290,000,000 had been paid out in wages in manufacturing industries. In Quebec province alone during the decade manufacturing establishments had increased from 4,445 to 6,667, with an increase in employees from 110,000 to 158,000. In such circumstances it was evident that the human factor should be given full consideration, so as to secure efficiency.

Montreal's Future Work

With present growth, Mr. Adams estimated that within a quarter of a century Montreal's population would be about 1,200,000 and he asked if any one knew of any work being done in the way of businesslike planning for that future? In Quebec province alone during the decade manufacturing establishments had increased from 4,445 to 6,667, with an increase in employees from 110,000 to 158,000. In such circumstances it was evident that the human factor should be given full consideration, so as to secure efficiency.

JESSE POMEROY'S MOTHER DEAD

Warden N. D. Allen of the Massacre street jail on Monday morning, to notify him of his mother's death.

The cell was very dark and Warden Allen could not see what effect the news had on Pomeroiy; whether or not he shed tears, judging by what he said, Pomeroiy felt very badly, making a remark about how good she had been to him all these years.

Pomeroiy had known his mother was ill, but he had no idea that it was a serious illness. He had hoped she would soon get better and again visit him.

Not long ago Pomeroiy sent his mother a long letter, in which he expressed the hope she would soon get better.

In it he said: "Mother, if you are not

150,000 MEN OF IRISH BIRTH IN GREAT WAR

John E. Redmond Declares In Speech at Limerick

Colors of Volunteers Are Blessed at Munster Demonstration—Stirring Address by the Irish Leader

(Boston Globe Correspondence.)

Dublin, Dec. 21.—The province of Munster demonstrated yesterday in stirring fashion its remarkable unanimity and loyalty to John E. Redmond, M. P., as leader of the Irish party. The assembly was unquestionably the largest and most representative that ever congregated around any platform in Limerick for a generation.

The Lord Mayor of Cork and the Mayors of Limerick, Waterford and Clonmel attended in state. The Irish volunteers, after the review, were presented colors by the Irish leader. The colors were blessed by Rev. J. O'Connor, Adm. of St. Michael's Church. An immense public demonstration was subsequently held.

Mr. Redmond delivered a momentous speech. They had been fond of boasting through long generations, he said, that they were capable of self-government; the test had come, and in Heaven's name let the Irish nation realize fully the gravity of its own responsibility.

"Organization Must Be Maintained."

Mr. Redmond referred to the organization that won victory. The claim had recently been made, he said, that because the victory had been won the machine and the organization that won victory should be discarded. A greater piece of political insanity was never suggested. Speaking of the attacks upon the system of holding conventions, Mr. Redmond said that no part of the national organization was so essential as the system of conventions. So far from abandoning the system of conventions they would stand by that system.

Mr. Rev. Mgr. Arthur Ryan, amidst great enthusiasm, said, in the course of an eloquent speech, that as an Irish priest he loved to find himself side by side with the people, and never more than when he found himself amongst the men with rifles on their shoulders, and, continuing, paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Redmond's great service in Ireland's cause.

A most interesting episode in the great gathering was the presence of several Belgians, who had come from Neagh, where they are at present being hospitably housed.

Mr. Redmond, in his address said in part:—

My position is this: The home rule bill is the home rule act, the home rule settlement, is not, to use the Kaiser's word, a scrap of paper to be torn up. It is a solemn treaty made between the people of Great Britain and the people of Ireland. I say that Ireland would cover herself with dishonor if, because danger looms on the horizon in England, she went back on her promise and her pledge.

"Our Duty Towards Belgium"

"Now, the second reason I have to give is this—the merits of this war, our duty towards Belgium, our duty towards the other small nations of the world. Believe me, the existence of the small nations of the world is at stake and when they must know the magnificent material that is here at their hands for the purpose."

"If Germany wins this war it would mean the end inevitably of the independence of Holland, of Denmark and of Switzerland, and probably of every small nation in Europe. I ask is there today an Irishman living on the soil of Ireland who, when reading of the destruction to churches and cathedrals in Belgium and in France, who, on reading of the butchery in the peaceful villages, or reading of the ruins of convents and the murders of priests and of nuns—is there an Irishman living, who, when reading these things, is not proud of the fact that there are Irishmen at the front endeavoring to maintain right and justice and to punish these crimes."

"And I ask, further, is there an Irishman living whose cheek would not burn with shame if it could be truly said of his country of Ireland—Ireland—the cradle of a fighting race—that it could be said of her that, either from base cowardice of her sons, or the ridiculous pretext of race hatred of England, or any other cause, that Ireland as a nation remained peacefully at home, and allowed other men, by risk of their lives, to save her from the fate of Belgium."

"I ask, further, is there a Catholic Irishman who would not blush with shame if it could be said that the only Irishmen who came to the succor of the friendly Catholic nation of Belgium were Orange volunteers? Happily, fellow countrymen, there is no such danger."

"Irishmen With the Colors."

"At this moment Ireland has 150,000 men of Irish birth with the colors. The Irish brigade, which I believe is destined to rival the glory of the old Irish brigade, is rapidly filling up, and when the war is over, when the small nations of Europe are vindicated, when Belgium is revenged, when Prussian militarism is destroyed, then Ireland will be able to boast that in proportion to her means—and I believe more than in proportion to her means—she has borne manfully her share in this great struggle, and has once again vindicated the valor of her sons."

"What I would say to those who cannot join is that they can do a good work here at home in preparing themselves to be, what I hope some day they will be, efficient for home defense. I cannot for the life of me understand why it is that the government and the War Office are so chary about giving assistance and instruction and help, to turn these volunteers into an effective as far as they have to remain at home, into an efficient home defense when I see them doing exactly what I suggest they should do here over in England."

She (during argument)—"You must not forget that Truth is a woman."

He—"Well, so is untruth, for that matter."

She—"What do you mean?"

He—"You've often heard of Miss-represent, haven't you?"—Washington Star.

ASSOCIATED CHARITIES

At a meeting of the Associated Charities yesterday Miss Robertson, secretary, reported on conditions. There was apparent a desire on the part of people to lower their household expenses so that it was difficult to find places for women. Many stenographers were also idle.

In this connection there is also today a letter from Mrs. Bowdler, of London saying that she has applications from 25 house servants who would like to come to New Brunswick. She will not send the girls before knowing that they can find places.

Miss Robertson reported that she had received during the month of December 809 applications of various kinds, including ninety requests for employment, the latter including 27 men, 87 women, five boys, seven young girls, four women to do sewing at home, three experienced nurses, five maids and two housekeepers. Other statements in the report were as follows: Requests for maids, 28; seeking relief, 38; recommended to employers, 40; employment found for, 42; advice given to 31; records given, 36; relief procured for, 44; visits made, 71; cases investigated, 23; letters written, 26; clothing given to 13. Ten men asked for night's lodging and four for transportation. The names of seventy families were given out by the secretary to those distributing Christmas cheer to the needy and deserving.

She (during argument)—"You must not forget that Truth is a woman."

He—"Well, so is untruth, for that matter."

She—"What do you mean?"

He—"You've often heard of Miss-represent, haven't you?"—Washington Star.
