Consolidating The Ontario Statutes

Big Task Confronts Commission
—Since Last Revision 1,275 Acts Passed.

Toronto, June 21.—If the commission which has been named to revise the Ontario statutes could do the task assigned to it, the time of the burning of the midnight oil. Work commenced on the 1914 revision in July, 1906, and nearly eight years later the task was completed. In that time, by reason of the wide powers invested in them, the commissioners had been able to consolidate the statutes that were still in force, to discard those which had become obsolete, and include all the legislation that had been passed since 1897. In the 1914 revision, instead of 342 chapters as in the 1897 revision, there were only 301 in the 1914 revision. But to do more than 900 sessions were held. Two or three meetings were held every week, and during vacations the commissioners met daily excepting only in August. For this work they were each allowed $1,000 a year.

Since the 1914 revision 1,275 acts have been passed by the legislature. Many of these are amending acts. Some of the acts have been amended in the same session of the legislature in which they were passed. Since the income of the Drury U. F. O. Labor administration 273 acts were passed. The work of consolidating these new acts with the previously existing legislation will be a tremendous task.

The chairman of the commission is Chief Justice Sir William Meredith, and the other commissioners are Mr. Justice Middleton, Mr. Justice Logie, Mr. Justice Mowat, ex-Judge C. G. Snider of Hamilton, Judge O'Connor of York County, Edward Bayly, K. C., and A. N. Middleton, the executive members of the Cabinet Council.

Aeroplane Turns Over, But it was Only a Few Feet in the Air.

New York, June 21.—Glover C. Loening, president of the Glover Aeronautical Engineering Corporation and three companions narrowly escaped death yesterday when they were dumped into the East River from a 400-horsepower hydro airplane. They were on an experimental flight to test the possibility of taking off on cross winds. The machine had risen about twenty feet and was just gathering headway when one
