

From the stars of heaven and the flowers of earth,
From the pageant of power and the voice of mirth,
From the mist of morn on the mountain's brow,
From childhood's song, and affection's vow,
From all save that which the soul bears away,
Breathes but one record passing away;

Passing away, sing the breeze and rill,
As they sweep on their course by vale and hill;
Through the varying scenes of each earthly clime,
'Tis the lesson of nature, the voice of time,
And man at last, like his fathers grey,
Writes in his own dust—passing away.

Forgiveness.—He that cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself—for every man hath need to be forgiven.—Lord Herbert.

It is a most excellent rule to avoid gross familiarity, even where the connexion is most intimate. The human heart is so constituted as to love respect. It would indeed be unnatural in very intimate friends to behave to each other with stiffness; but there is a delicacy of manner, and a flattering deference, which tends to preserve that degree of esteem which is necessary to support affection, and which is lost in contempt when a too great familiarity is allowed. An habitual politeness of manners will prevent even indifference from degenerating to hatred. It will refine, exalt, and perpetuate affection.—Knox's Essays.
