Ministry launches sweeping review

By DAVID WEBSTER

The Ministry of Colleges and Universities has launched a sweeping review into the future of Ontario community colleges.

"Colleges have just passed their twentieth birthdays, and a review of the system and its relevance is needed in light of changes in the types of people going to colleges," explained Ministry official Helena Moncrieff.

The Vision 2000 steering committee which met for the first time last Tuesday, has no specific plans yet, said committee member Shelley Potter, chairperson of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS). Potter is pleased that students are included on the steering committee, and hopes that students will be represented on Vision 2000's five study teams.

Whether Ontario can maintain all 22 of its community colleges into the next century is one question being asked. Steering committee chair Dr. Charles Pascal said this does not mean that colleges will be shut down, but committee members will "park [their] vested interests at the door and examine all the sacred cows." He added that a review of the college system is a good idea to keep colleges responsive to the community.

Pascal is also the Chair of the Ontario Council of Regents of Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology, which is co-ordinating Vision 2000. The review involves several present and former university officials, including Guelph president Brian Segal and former U of T president John Evans.

One Vision 2000 study team will examine the relationship between colleges and universities. Presently, five per cent of applicants originate from college students, said Pascal. Yet, only some institutions allow students to transfer credits between the two systems. Pascal hopes that Vision 2000 will clarify policies regarding the transfer of credits.

The steering committee makes its final recommendations in Fall 1989. Discussion papers will start to circulate in the next few months.
