

Stewart White, and I probably knew Clifford best, and perhaps the fact that I lived in the fraternity house with him for two years has given me a juster appreciation of him than either of the others has. During that time I came to love him, and, more than that, to admire him. His absolute honesty in every respect, his kindness, his conscientiousness about his work, his loyalty to his ideals, his modesty of manner, were only some of his praiseworthy characteristics. His death on the field of battle for the sake of the ideals of humanity was quite in keeping with the general nobility of his life. I know that he went to war from no motive of adventure, but because he felt it his duty to do his part in maintaining the cause of liberty and righteousness against the forces of injustice and oppression.

Without being at all aware of the fact, he has had a large influence in inspiring others to the same sort of action. His example has stirred the fraternity so deeply that when the time came for the boys of the United States to offer their services, the active chapter of Pi Kappa Chi, with but a very few exceptions, has given itself to some form or other of activity to aid in the prosecution of the war. I am sure that if he had known how much his in-
