

1865 it was once more visited by a conflagration which consumed almost half of the building. Finally on January 1st, 1888, its ancient chapel with its priceless paintings became the prey of the devouring element.

Towards the middle of the last century, the seminary developed into Laval University, which, with its new wings and additions, now forms a most conspicuous group of buildings.

No. 33.—

Near the Seminary and at the foot of Ste. Famille Street, stood Hope Gate, erected in 1786 by Col. Henry Hope, Commandant of the Forces and Lieutenant Governor of the Province. It was demolished in 1874.

No. 34.—Montcalm's Residence:

Proceeding along the Ramparts we next come to the residence of the Marquis de Montcalm. In his time and for years afterwards, it was of one story only, and the entrance was through a courtyard in the rear. It was never destroyed but instead, was enlarged by the addition of another story. It is now divided into three lodgings and faces the Ramparts.

No. 35.—L'Hôtel-Dieu:

The Hospitalières arrived with the Ursulines in 1639, and first settled in Sillery. When e they
