What Canada can Learn From Otto H. Kahn

"The period into which the world is about to enter will be governed mainly by economic problems of which social problems form a part in the peaceful but strenuous commercial strife which will follow the settlement of the world war in arms that nation will win the price of the most abundant and best remunerated employment of its people and the greatest progress and prosperity which will know best how to adjust its affairs so as to strike the right balance between on the one hand, the requirements of economics, the promotion of trade and the stimulation of enterprise and, on the other hand, the dictates of social justice and the welfare and contentment of the masses of the people. If business pulls one way, labor another, farmers a third and politics a fourth the result is much waste motion and lost effort and an impairment of our national effectiveness. It is to be hoped that in the days before us, public opinion having rightly informed itself on the needs and means, will come to exact and bring about a greater degree of team work than heretofore in the pursuit of the essentials of our national economic purposes, for the good of all."
