JURY BLAMES DOCTOR IN TAMWORTH CASE

been scorched. The witness declared that the condition of the linen showed that something had been carried in the sheet to the fire and then thrown into the flames.

Letter Kept Secret

Another sensation was created when Damon B. Floyd, a general storekeeper, produced in court a letter written to him by the doctor and posted from Kingston shortly after the physician left Tamworth for parts unknown. The letter, it appeared, had not been shown to the police when the investigation was being held, and Mr. Floyd was severely censured by Crown Attorney Preston for withholding such important evidence. When the letter was produced in court the Crown Attorney made a public announcement that it was considered to be of such importance that its contents would be withheld from the public, although the jury was permitted to read it upon the understanding that they would not divulge its contents.

It was ascertained, however, that the letter was a personal communication from Dr. Robinson to Mr. Floyd in regard to the latter securing for him a set of surgical instruments which the doctor feared would be seized by his creditors. The most important matter in the letter was the fact that the instruments were to be sent to him at Kingston and that the merchant was not to divulge the fact that he had received the communication to any residents in the village. Mr. Floyd in explaining the affair to the corner stated that the reason he did not give the letter to the police was the fact that he was afraid criminal proceedings would be taken against the doctor and that he would be called to give evidence at the trial. "I showed the letter to one other person," the witness said, "and he also advised me to say nothing about it." Mr. Floyd also admitted that he was a personal friend of the doctor and that the latter had his offices over the merchant's store.

The Wife Shows Up

Shortly after the afternoon session opened, Mrs. C. K. Robinson, the doctor's wife, who has been ill in a Kingston hospital, accompanied by the physician's brother and brother-in-law, Dr. George Bell, arrived in the village. No intimation of the intended trip was given and their arrival created great surprise. It appeared, however, that the inquest was not the cause of the trip for the only member of the party to appear at the session was Dr. Bell, who made but a brief stay. It was stated that the trip involved the state of Dr. Robinson's business affairs and which caused the sudden trip from Kingston. Upon arriving here both Dr. Bell and Mrs. Robinson was closeted with Inspector Greer and Crown Attorney Prescott for a short time but beyond the act that the conference had no bearing on the case no further particulars were made public. That the body found in the cellar of Dr. Robinson's house was that of Miss Yorke was established at a closing session of the inquest. The corpse was positively identified by Dr. Stewart Lockridge a dentist who recognized the work he had done upon the teeth. Daniel McGregor, fiancé of the dead girl, also identified the opal engagement ring which he had given to Miss Yorke and which was found upon the finger of the corpse. A silver purse found in the house was recognized by Samuel Yorke as that belonging to his sister.

Mrs. Thompson told about Dr. Robinson taking some sheets to her to be washed shortly after Miss Yorke disappeared. These sheets, the witness said, was spotted with blood stains. "It was on a Friday night," she said, "when the doctor came to me. He carried a bundle in his hand and asked me to wash them and return them for sure by Saturday afternoon. He said that I was to take them to his office and if he was not there I was to leave them with Mr. Floyd. The bundle was very heavy and on opening it I found that it contained some sheets which were soaked with water. There was a number of blotches caused by blood upon them and it was apparent that the doctor had tried to wash them himself and failed. On making a further investigation I noticed that the hem of one of the sheets was burned. The burn was made in such a manner as to indicate that he had tried to throw something into the fire from the sheet.

"During the time the doctor was talking he seemed to be very nervous and looked white and ill. I washed the sheets for him and left them in Mr. Floyd's store to be delivered."

Floyd's Statement

Damon B. Floyd stated that he was a close friend of Dr. Robinson. When asked as to receiving a letter from the physician after the doctor had disappeared, Mr. Floyd admitted he had, and that he kept the affair a secret. "Only one letter came to me after Dr. Robinson left," he explained. "This was on the 19th. It was posted from Kingston, but I have no reason to believe that he was in that city then. The only reason that I did not notify the authorities was that I was afraid of becoming mixed up in the affair if it ever was taken to court. Also I did not see anything in the letter which appeared to pertain to the disappearance of Miss Yorke, and I could not see the necessity of making the letter public property."

The witness stated that when the girl vanished he spoke to Dr. Robinson and asked him if he had anything to do with the affair.

The doctor said that he had not, and declared that he had only treated her for stomach trouble. "In concluding the doctor said to me," he stated, "that he would not have any time to perform an operation while Miss Yorke was in his office, even if we desired to do so. Later, we searched his house, but could find nothing. I also investigated the yard and cellar, but there was nothing there."

Dan McGregor told of the various searches made for the girl by himself and her relatives, and swore that he had been stopped by Dr. Robinson several times before the latter left the town, and asked if there had been anything discovered. "The last time the doctor stopped me," said the witness, "he suggested that I drag the river as it might be possible that she had thrown herself into the water." Mr. McGregor swore that when he and Sam Yorke, the dead girl's brother, first saw the doctor after Miss Yorke had disappeared, the physician declared that he did not know whether she had visited him on the Wednesday night or not.

"He later stated that she had been in for about twenty minutes," said the witness, "but when examined in our presence by Inspector Miller, he admitted that it was about an hour and a half. He declared that he was treating her for stomach trouble, and that on the night that she was last seen he was kneading her stomach for gas." "Did you know that Dr. Robinson was treating Miss Yorke," asked the Crown. "She told me so."

"Yes, but not until after Miss Yorke was missing."

"Did either parties ever say anything to you about paying the expenses?" "No, absolutely nothing."

"Was it ever stated that you would do so eventually and were you ever in Dr. Robinson's office before Miss Yorke disappeared?" "No."

Says Body Was Not Buried

The evidence of Mr. McGregor regarding the visit to Dr. Robinson was corroborated by him and Ed. Yorke, while Inspector Greer and High Constable Vankoughnet told of finding the body and of exhuming it. Details of the previous search made by Inspector Miller were given by the high constable, who emphatically declared that the body was not buried at that time. "We went through the house very thoroughly and carefully and I am sure that the body was not concealed in it," said the officer, "unless, of course, it was secreted in the mattress and taken from there to be interred in the cellar after we left."

The witness also said that the furnace had been searched, but that nothing suspicious had been found. He believed that bones and ashes of clothes subsequently found were burned by Inspector Greer, who, in describing the discovery to the jury stated that there was also a solid mass of ashes which he believed was the result of part of the contents of a mattress being burned.

By the evidence of C. R. Jones, manager of the Sterling Bank, it was shown that Miss Yorke had over $67 on deposit. The manager said that there had been no withdrawals for some time previous to the woman's disappearance or since she had been missing.

Looked for Living Only

There was much discussion before it was decided that it was permissible that H. Richardson, a jurymen, should give evidence, but finally the coroner allowed it. Mr. Richardson related his story in a straightforward manner without interruption.

"When I first heard of Miss Yorke's disappearance, it was the general opinion that the doctor seemed to have been implicated in the affair."

"On Sunday, July 11th, Dr. Robinson came along the street, and it struck me then that it would be well to call him aside and tell him of the suspicion. I called him into my shop and stated that there was a report in circulation that the missing girl might be concealed in his house for treatment."

"I told him that my advice to him would be for him to choose two respectable men to show his whole house to make sure that she was not there."

"He seemed to fall readily in line with our requests, and he asked Mr. Carscallen and myself to go through the house with him."

"We went through the house, not expecting to find any trace of a living person. Then we went into the cellar, and down there I struck a match. As I did so the doctor halted and jerked himself up. I noticed it at the time, and remarked it after."

"Anyway, our examination proved to our satisfaction that there was no living person within the house at all."

Displayed Anxiety

"The following morning the doctor called me out of my shop while he was on his way to the depot in the bus and asked me to give him the names of any person who had been circulating reports about him."

"I said to him, 'Doctor, what do you mean? What report is there in circulation? If there is any I haven't heard about it.'"

At the time something about his countenance struck me; his actions were peculiar. His head was continually toying in the air and he seemed to be uneasy."

Mr. Carscallen, who was foreman of the jury, corroborated Mr. Richardson's testimony regarding the visit to the house.

The funeral of Miss Yorke will be held from the Methodist Church tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. The service will be conducted by Rev. Joseph Barnes, the pastor, and will be public.

ROYAL GIFTS TO SHACKLETON

Mascot and Flags From Queen Alexandra—Endurance Inspected.

Queen Alexandra, who is taking deep interest in Sir Ernest Shackleton's projected voyage to the Arctic regions and his journey across South Pole paid a visit of inspection Thursday at the West India Dock to the Endurance, the vessel in which the explorer and his party intend to make the sea passage.

Her Majesty was accompanied by her sister, the Empress Marie of Russia, Princess Victoria, and several members of the Royal and Imperial families and reached the dock at 12.20. The ship was gaily decorated for the occasion, and her entire company was assembled to welcome visitors.

Sir Ernest Shackleton received Royal visitors in person and presented Lady Shackleton and their children—Raymond, Cicely, and Edward. The officers also were present and the Queen greeted them graciously and they chatted to them about interesting but hazardous enterprises. The members of the ship's company also were presented and Sir Ernest Shackleton called special attention to those who had accompanied him on a former expedition. To these Queen talked for some time, put many questions illustrative of keen interest in their travels, and giving them all success in their venture.

The hut intended for the ship's quarters was rigged up all side the vessel, and the visitors inspected it and all its appointments in the greatest detail. They also inspected every part of the Endurance and Queen Alexandra expressed approval of all the appointments, was particularly impressed with severe economy of space which it had been found necessary to practise. Inevitably practical as usual, her Majesty felt the mattresses and declared to be very springy and comfortable but was at a loss to understand the occupants could manage in so tiny quarters. The saloon she thought "very nice but very small."

The question of victualling naturally appealed to her and she examined the galley arrangements very minutely, and with evident approval. Sir Ernest expected that the Royal ladies would hardly care to go to but they insisted on doing so. Queen Alexandra remarking "I am going to see everything." So great was interest and so thorough her examination that the visit, originally intended to last but half an hour, extended to nearly an hour and a half. The Royal ladies were keen on learning about the motor-sledge which is intended to use on journeying across the great ice-fields and they had
