Women Shipbuilders. Women have outlasted men in certain work in British shipyards and more of them are being added to the shipbuilding forces as rapidly as possible.

At Lord Furness' shipyards on the Tees 700 women are working with spades and shovels, on extensions. Some of the women have been assisting in the building of a temporary railway at the yards and others laying concrete platforms on which the keels of ships will be put down. In preparing concrete for the keel platforms gangs of women work beside gangs of men, and in one instance the women beat the men by four yards. Numerous other incidents have been cited whereby the women outpointed the men workers on the same kind of work.

There are branches of work from which women are barred, because they haven't the muscular endurance, but whenever possible Lord Furness has been replacing it men of military age with women. At first there were many sprained ankles, due to the habit of women going to work in flimsy boots, often with worn peep-toe heels, which were no use among loose soil and stones. A standard low-heeled shipyard boot has now been introduced.

Noah's Ark

A good word for Noah's presence as a shipbuilder is found in an allusion to his Ark in Nauticus, "It would not be a difficult task," says that journal, "to pick out of Lloyd's Register many ships built within the last twenty years whose dimensions suggest a form closely resembling that of Noah's Ark. According to the dimension given in the Bible as translated in terms of modern measurement the Ark was 480 feet long, 90 feet wide, and 48 feet deep. Her tonnage was 11,413, and she had plenty of room for pairs of all the distinct species of animals that are classed by Buffon as 24—and she could have accommodated a thousand persons and then had plenty of room for the storage of supplies."

Times Change

Horatio Nelson and Paul Jones met in that sound-proof section of Paradise reserved for sailors, relates Life. They argued fiercely of old campaigns, and the peace of the blissful regions might have been seriously disturbed, notwithstanding, Nelson's single eye. If a thorn-like ex-captain hadn't called their attention to a crack in the floor, through which they could see a squadron of British destroyers sweeping the sea before a fleet of Yankee transports. Then Nelson and Jones exchanged tobacco pouches and thought long in silence, as supremely happy sailors will.
