THE AUDITORIUM

At the Auditorium next Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday matinee, Bryant Washburn will be seen in the leading role of a splendid picture "It Pays to Advertise." Following is a synopsis of the picture:

Rodney Martin, a young fellow with any number of golden spoons in his mouth, owing to the fact that his father, Cyrus, is king in the manufacture of soap, has spent a hilarious four years in college and it is to the general amazement of his friends that he has never been expelled. At the close of his final year, right after a game in which his college mates emerged victors, Rodney in company with practically the whole college attends the local theatre where a musical outfit is giving a show.

Musical comedies must be good to go in college towns and this particular one wasn't. And so it happened that one of the comedians, a peculiar effeminate creature, felt his face spattered with hen-fruit coming from the general direction of the box occupied by Rodney and his pals—this happening at about the middle of the first act. The show ended in a riot before it had half started and Rodney and his companions in crime saw nasty jail sentences staring them in the face for the police were upon them and the house manager was angry. But it so happened that just this time Rodney made an acquaintance that was to prove to his benefit and that was to last him a lifetime. The acquaintance was Ambrose Peale, the advance agent for the show, who for a little change, five hundred dollars or so to be exact, agreed to get Rodney out of the trouble and also supply him with a few chorus girls to make his dinner that night the merrier occasion.

And so Rodney's college days finally come to a close and he travels home to the parental door-mat, none the worse for his studies. Cyrus Martin, however, is in no happy frame of mind. He has been calculating and he has discovered the exceedingly cold fact that son Rodney has cost him exactly $293,000 since his birth. He proposes, so he tells Rodney, to put him to work in one of his soap factories, so that he may at least gain a slight return on his heavy investment. But Rodney in a soap factory? Well, he tries it but that smell that develops during the manufacture of scented soaps gets on his nerves and so he quits. Anyway, he opines, his father has more money now than both of them can spend in a lifetime, so why work?

Be that as it may, Cyrus still has a different idea of the whole situation and he takes his secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and offers her a large sum of money if she can persuade Rodney to go to work. And Mary succeeds. Not because she argues with her prospect logically and puts the facts up to him coldly but because she falls in love with him and he with her. And so Rodney at least is furnished the stimulus to go to work and work hard—but what to do?

And then Rodney meets up with his old friend Ambrose Peale, the same old press agent of his college days. Press agents don't always work and Ambrose is out of luck in this particular instance, but two heads prove better than one and Ambrose's brain and Rodney's money (money gained from pawning everything in sight) prove a happy combination. Ambrose is a strict believer in the power of advertising. "Look at all the things that have been made the necessities of life," he says, "just by advertising." He points out the window to a gum sign, a garter sign, an automobile sign, a beer sign. "It pays to advertise" is his argument.

And thus far started on their enterprise it doesn't take Rodney and Ambrose long to evolve the name of the new soap, "Thirteen Soap" is the name of it and it is advertised as "Thirteen Soap; Unlucky for Dirt." And advertise it they do, so extensively that they soon create a big demand for it. But in their haste to advertise the product properly they had forgotten all about the soap itself. Rodney's only salvation is to buy a product from one of his father's branch factories. The shipment in he proceeds to wrap it in elaborate trimming and the sale goes on.

Rodney has made a success in business. He realizes this more strongly than ever when his father, having heard of the new brand, makes him an offer of $50,000 to buy him out. But Cyrus, soon afterwards, getting wise to the whole situation, withdraws his offer. Again, however, Cyrus is forced to change his mind. A representative of a large department store comes in with a tremendous offer for the name and Cyrus, seeing that his son has followed the right line after all, reconsiders and adopts his son's enterprise for a handsome cash consideration.

Mr. Warne was for years superintendent of the Saanich Lumber Co. and the Canadian Southern Lumber Co., of Sidney, (now known as the Sidney Mills, Ltd.) Mr. Warne is superintendent of the Qualicum Lumber Co.

DANCE LAST NIGHT.

The "Harmony Four Orchestra" gave a very successful dance in the Berquist Hall last night, under the auspices of the Sidney Athletic Association. The music provided by the orchestra was splendid, as evidenced by the numerous encores. The supper provided proved very palatable, and was enjoyed by all.
