ANGES AND STOCKS

Past and Present.

From Blackwood's Magazine for August. I saw a little merry maiden, With laughing eye and sunny hair, And heart and spirit light as air ;

And hand and fancy active ever, Devising, doing, striving still; Defeated off-despairing never-Up springing atrong in hope and will. saw her bounding in her gladness, on a wild heath on dowy morn, Weaving a gissening wild-loss parland. With clusters from the senited thorn, Law her singing at her needle.

But that of fairer still, a vision Rose to the happy creature's night. And to a fairy world of fancy The mind was gone, more swift than

I saw her smiling in her slumber. The blissful day-dream not gone by I saw her weep—but bosom sunshir Broke out before the tear was dry

I saw her, "troops of friends" encircling Read kind good-will in many a face-With a bright glance, that memed exultin
"Oh happy world! oh pleasant place!"

I saw a dim-eyed dark browed wannan Declining in the vale of years?
Pale atreats among the dull looks gles

I saw her wandering in her loneness Among the tombe at even tide, When autumn's winds with hollow murmurs,

I saw the sere leaves failing round her, I heard a voice-I caught a murmur,

I thought upon that merry maiden-I looked upon that woman lone;

—A young lady by the name of Crowder, daughter of Mr. John Crowder, who resides sixteen or seventeen miles above this place, lost fer life on Saturday evening last, through the unpardonable carelessness of her brother. We understand that saturacy overing tast, through the uppardonable carelessness of hor brother. We understand that Miss Growder had been absent several days on a visit to a neighbour, and when within a short distance of home, met her brother, (eighteen or twenty years old) who had been out to muster, and he had his rifle upon his shoulder. He jokingly remarked to his sister that he had a good mind, to shoot her for being gone so long—missed his gun, and pointed it at her at the name simes agroung the trigger, when the rifle fired, and the bull entered her side, just above the hip. When he found that he had wounded her, he became very much alarend, and buriled from for assistance. The inther number to the spirit, found his arms; that else i whe war grove!
