The Bishop Finds Two In One

(Joseph Mary Shannon, in Queen's Work).

Concluded The bishop pressed his quiet old hand over the nervously twitching ones. "Her name," he shall say where they stood? said—"now listen to me, for you For the joy of two who love and have to hear it--her name is Ellen Gilmore. Yes, for there's ment is a joy almost too great two of you, Ellen, the same as for earth, so close does it bring the weak and the strong, the selfish and the selfless. It is for you to choose which of the two you'll be. I've seen the finer woman born in you to-day; let her be ruler henceforth, and joy will be with you." It was then given the bishop to behold a radiance, a wonder and a bliss like to that of a soul that enters the Heavenly City. His Lordship rose to his feet and buttoned up his coat, all but he top button, which he left open the better to show the purple stock. He was glad to-day that he was a bishop.

"Ellen, m'asthore-thu," he said in the ease of strain relaxed, "I'd be givin' ye a lift on the road home only I have a sick-call to make-a poor fellow that's hurt internally and is a bit out of his right mind, I think. It is a case I don't like to leave to Father Mitchell, for he's but a young man to handle the like.

Ellen was not experienced enough in his Lordship's duplicity to be suspicious of detailed and unnecessary explanations. She only thought what an angel of goodness he was to everybody

Corney Flynn, in all of his pampered life as comrade and confident of the bishop, had never been driven so hard as on the two-mile siretch from the Gooleen National School to Kilfarnam. No invitations to balance the car' were extended this timeall whom they passed sent up prayers for their safety, and thought the bishop was driving into battle, murder, and sudden death. Corney foamed indignation when he was halted at Dr. Blake's surgery.

"Aleck, ye used to be in the habit of seein' Ellen home from school before ye took to robbin' land-tax agents usen't ye?"

"Miss Gilmore prefers to walk by herself now. Your Lordship." The doctor spoke stiffly, because of that bad internal hurt.

"That's where you're wrong my boy. She doesn't prefer to walk by herself; she wants you to walk with her, and help her over the rough places, and love and care for her through rough

The memory of long, happy walks together pulled hard at severity, "I'm looking at this Aleck; the springs of emotion from the standing point of a were tapped; but the bishop could still sense that internal

If Ellen wants me to walk with her she'll have to come and ask me," he said.

"Get down from your high horse," admonished His Lord ship. "Ellen has every right to feel indignant with you. Only

A work of truly apostolic character is being pursued in the Diocese of Pittsburg by a body of layteachers, founded by the Apostolic Fathers of the Diocese, and known as the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine.
