

Rheumatism and Lumbago

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills:—"My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble. I had awful, sharp pains in the lower part of my back and left hip, and was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

When you have pains and aches put Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to the test. By enlivening the action of liver, kidneys and bowels they cleanse the system of all poisons, and thereby remove the cause of rheumatism, lumbago and other painful diseases.

One pill a dose. 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"This is the Rajah's Ruby. The counterfeit is in my jewel-case. I had it made because I had a presentiment that the real ruby would be stolen. An exact description of the spot in which I have hidden the ruby. I have given in a paper which I have placed in my despatch-box; so that, if anything should happen to me, the ruby may be recovered and given to my beloved daughter.—MORTIMER DESBOROUGH."

There was an intense silence; then Sir Reginald said hoarsely:—"The despatch-box. I have it. I remember the paper. I admit, with shame, that I attached no importance to it; I took it for a rough plan of some improvement Sir Mortimer intended making in the tower."

"Ah!" remarked Vane, rather grimly; "if you had ever been engaged in hunting for a buried treasure, now—However, that's another matter. Be good enough to take up your ruby, Sir Reginald. There is a safe handy there, and it looks a good one." He Torture Of Sciatica Cured Quick! "Nerviline" A Success Every Time.

Stops the Pain Quick—Acts Like Magic—Is Harmless and Pleasant.

Sciatica is the most severe pain man can suffer. The great sciatic nerve is deeply placed, and you can reach it only by a pain remedy, as penetrating and powerful as NERVILINE.

The glory of Nerviline is in its strength—in its marvellous power of penetrating deeply. In severe pains, such as sciatica and neuralgia, NERVILINE demonstrates its superiority over every other remedy.

Extraordinary pains, such as rheumatic or sciatic, can be overcome only by a remedy as extraordinary as Nerviline. In many lands it has shown itself to be the best for little pains, turned to Dexter Reece, "Are you satisfied, Mr. Reece? If not, I can give you the name of an expert on whom you can fully rely. By the way, if he pronounces that stone of yours a counterfeit, which he most assuredly will do, I should like to buy it of you, and add it to my little museum of curiosities—criminal and otherwise."

Dexter Reece rose, gripping the arm of his chair. He was too clever a man not to know that he was beaten.

"I am quite satisfied," he said, biting at his lip, and struggling for self-possession. "You will admit that I had cause for doubt; but the evidence is irrefragable. I am not only satisfied, but I rejoice at the fact that the real ruby has been discovered. It only remains for me to restore the counterfeit to the person from whom I obtained it. There is an early train, Sir Reginald; if you will be so good as to order a carriage—"

"Not so fast, Mr. Reece," said Mr. Lexham sternly. "Your part in this matter must be explained before a proper tribunal. We cannot permit you to go."

"I think I'd let him go, Mr. Lexham," said Vane, surveying Dexter Reece thoughtfully. "I don't think we shall want him; I've an idea that the mystery will solve itself without Mr. Reece's further assistance. And, best for big pains, and best for all pains.

When one has acute rheumatic pains, stiff joints or a stiff neck, don't experiment—seek a remedy that cures. Like lightning in rapidity, as sure as fate in its certainty of relief, Nerviline can never be surpassed for the removal of pain, no matter what advance science may make. It is perfection in its line.

Do not trifle with ordinary or oily liniments, use Nerviline. Prove its efficacy—its the one liniment that rubs right into the core of the pain.

A large 50 cent bottle will cure the aches and pains of the whole family. Trial size, 25 cents. Sold by all dealers everywhere.

if we find that we do want him, I've no doubt Mr. Reece will accept our invitation to present himself."

Mr. Lexham still looked doubtful; but he shrugged his shoulders with a reluctant assent; and Sir Reginald said sternly:

"A carriage shall be ordered for you, sir."

Nothing less dramatic than Dexter Reece's departure can be imagined. He stood for a moment staring straight before him; then, with a nod, opened the door and went out. He uttered no oath, made no gesticulation, and even closed the door behind him quite carefully and noiselessly. But, though he made no sign, he knew that his career was finished, that he must at once find some remote spot in which he could hide himself, and drag out the remainder of his life.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Smithers did not recover sufficiently soon to permit of Ronald joining the yacht; so that the Princess and Cara were the only passengers. There was a singular situation; they both loved the same man; the one was succouring, protecting the other!

At first the Princess winced inwardly, as one shrinks at the touch of an open wound, when ever she looked at Cara; but after a few days the elder and more experienced woman's feelings obtained the mastery over jealousy; she could not steel herself against the pathos of the girl's situation, could not resist that nameless charm which Cara always quite unconsciously exerted. The Princess went down before her as Evelyn had done, and presently she found herself able to sit and talk with Cara; and before they reached England she had grown attached to her.

The voyage, the rest, the security, worked their beneficent influences; and Cara, who had been carried aboard dead than alive, regained some of her strength; the brightness came back to her eyes, the serenity to her manner; and as she improved in health, and the Princess noted the revival of the girl's extraordinary beauty, the Princess, with a sigh, an emotion of resignation, felt that Ronald, or, for that matter, any other man, could not have resisted her.

Their first lengthy conversation landed the Princess in a difficulty, for it will be remembered that she knew nothing of the fact that Ronald had been living under an assumed name, knew nothing of the episode of the buried treasure; and, when she remarked one morning, as they sat on deck, "It is more than a pity that Mr. Desborough could not catch us at Marseilles," Cara looked up with a start of surprise, and said:

"Mr. Desborough? Who is that?"

The Princess stared at her, then coloured with embarrassment.

"Why, Ronald! You must not mind me calling him by his Christian name. I have known him for some years, and—and we have been great friends. He did me a great service once—"

She saw Cara's amazement and bewilderment. "Surely you know of whom I am speaking, Miss Raven?"

Cara shook her head.

"No," she said simply; "you cannot mean Robert?"

"I can't mean any other!" said the Princess. "Is it possible that you know him by another name? I mean your—your future husband?"

Cara blushed, and she said gravely: "Is that his name—Desborough? No, I did not know it. He told me—"

"Whatever he told you, he had good reason for doing it," said the Princess loyally. "He is the soul of honour."

"I know that," said Cara, as if she were stating that the sun was shining.

"And he is Ronald Desborough?"

"Yes," said the Princess. "As I have told you so much, I may as well—it is only fair to you that I should—tell you more. If I am doing wrongly Ronald will forgive me. He is the son of a baronet, Sir Reginald Desborough, of Thorden Hall."

"I know," said Cara, quietly. "I know Miss Desborough. She was kind to me when I lived in a mill near the Hall. I did not know that Robert—Ronald—it is hard to change the name in one's mind so quickly—was her brother."

The Princess now was overwhelmed with surprise for a moment or two.

"I don't know what to say," she said at last. "Ronald may not have wanted you to know."

"You shall not tell me any more," said Cara in a low voice.

"Very well," assented the Princess; "but I must say this, for—both our sakes. We have been old friends, he and I—no more than that. Oh, no more! I am married, Cara. I have been very unhappy—"

Not for a moment had Cara been suspicious, and she stretched out her hand, and laid it, with all the sympathy of her strong nature, on the elder woman's arm. It was at that instant, perhaps, that the Princess surrendered, gave up her love for Ronald, and took this beautiful, gentle girl to her heart.

They reached London, and the Princess took Cara to the house in Eaton Square which the Princess owned, and treated her as a sister.

"There is nothing to be done until Ronald comes, dear," she said. "We can only wait."

SHATTERED NERVES

Too many people disregard the warning of jangled nerves. And slowly but surely—neglect lets this curse of modern life affect every organ and every function of the body and mind.

For the nervous system is not independent and separate—but is intimately connected with stomach, liver, heart and brain.

You should heed the very first warning that your nerves telegraph to your intelligence.

First, remove the cause of the trouble. If you don't know what the cause is, consult a capable physician at once.

Second, rebuild and tone up your nervous system with ZOO-TIC—the Greek Health Tonic.

It is a new and improved combination of glycer-phosphates, fine odorless-rendered Cod Liver Oil containing no greases and the best procurable tonic wine. Your own physician will tell you that glycer-phosphates contain the actual elements of the human body in the most assimilative form, and the value of Cod Liver Oil in rebuilding tissue, and tonic wine in rebuilding nerve force are too well known to need discussion. Zoo-tic has a delightful taste.

Everywhere in Canada at the same price. One Dollar for a Generous Bottle. Compounded from food and tonic elements by The Zoo-tic Company, Montreal.

They arrived in the evening, and the Princess met Ronald in the hall, with both hands outstretched and a brave look of friendliness in her eyes, which answered the question in his with a smile.

"Yes; she is all right. You will see. She is waiting for you upstairs. We are both glad you have come!"

He pressed her hands in wordless gratitude, and went up the stairs two steps at a time, and caught Cara to his arms.

"Let me look at you, dearest!" he said, after a moment or two. "Ah, it's the old Cara come back to me! How well you are looking! Tell me about the voyage. The Princess has been—?"

"More than good to me," Cara hastened to assure him. "No one could have been kinder. She is a true friend, Robert—Ronald—you see I know!"

He nodded.

"Yes, dearest? She has told you? There was no time at Monte Carlo to tell you, to explain. I was coming from the Hall, my father's place, that night I lost my way across the moor—and—found you! I had a quarrel with the Princess's husband and was afraid that I had hurt him seriously, perhaps killed him—no, no! he is all right!—so I took another name. I will tell you everything."

"And my father?" she asked in a low voice, her face averted.

Ronald shook his head.

"I don't know what has become of him, dearest; he has disappeared and I could not trace him. You are not—grieving, Cara?"

"No," she said, looking at him with a troubled expression. "I can't. It is wrong, unnatural; but—but—ah! you don't know how unkind, how cruel he was to me at last!—I think that—that he was not sane, Ronald."

"I'm inclined to agree with you," he said gravely. "But we will not think of him."

"There is one thing I must speak of," she said. "The treasure; he—he stole that, Ronald?"

"I don't know. Not unlikely," he said reluctantly. "But that's past and done with. My partner, Mr. Vane, and I gave it up as a bad job long ago. And now about ourselves, darling. How soon can you marry me?"

She trembled; but she did not draw away from him, did not remind him of the difference in their social positions. She was too inexperienced, too ignorant of the world to think of the possible obstacles to their marriage. It was sufficient for her that he loved her; he was lord of her heart and soul; his wish was her desire.

"When you want me to," she said simply; and her prompt obedience found its reward instantly.
