Time's Revenge.

"Thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges."

For the German Government to be told to apply to General Foch, the French Commander in Chief of all the Allied forces in the war, in order to receive from him the terms of the armistice under which a cessation of hostilities may take place, is a point of justice indeed, and we may well picture the surprise with which the announcement has been received by the Prussian militarists, who presumably thought that they would be treated differently and their overtures made the subject of diplomatic pourparlers, where German swaggers would impress the various Allied representatives. But curiously and formally they have been told to make their application to Foch. Thus is France avenged for the humiliation put upon her by Germany on the 10th day of May, 1871, when the treaty of peace which ended the Franco-Prussian War was signed at Frankfurt. The humiliation of France that day was not so much the signing of the treaty, but the terms, which that treaty, drawn up by Bismarck, "the man of blood and iron," imposed, the principal clauses of which were (1) cession of Alsace-Lorraine, (2) payment of an indemnity of $1,000,000,000 ($200,000,000) and (3) pending payment German garrisons in France to be maintained by the French people. A few months prior to this, on March 1-3 to be exact, France was compelled to submit to the indignity of having the German troops billeted in Paris for forty-eight hours, a hideous profanation, which has been kept in mind by the French people, as no French man of woman can forget the horrors of those few hours, and it is well for the Germans, perhaps, that Foch had not the preparation of the armistice terms, which Germany must accept or continue fighting a losing battle. At the same time there is no reason to believe, nor should we conclude, that the terms submitted to Germany by the Supreme Council are easy. The language of President Wilson in his note of November 5th does not suggest that. His points are clear, and the German Government is plainly given to understand that no argument will be allowed. "Our terms are there," it says in effect, "it is for you to accept, not to question." In order to be more explicit, the President elaborates on the correct interpretation of the "Freedom of the Seas," and informs Germany that the Allies reserve for themselves the right to detain this clause (2) according to their own ideas when they enter the Peace Conference. The Compensation Clause, by which Germany must pay for all damage done to civilian populations of the Allies and their property by the aggression of Germany by land, on sea and in air is also enlarged upon. The items in this bill of claims alone will reach a far greater sum than the five milliards of francs extorted from France, which bled herself white in raising the indemnity in 1871. As there is no time like the present, we may, apologising for the repetition, consider just a few of the items outstanding against the Hun since August 1914, lest they be forgotten, and for which payment must be made.

The sack of Louvain; massacre of Belgian population; women, girls and children outraged; homes defiled and burnt; banks robbed. Women and children used as screens for machine gunners. Repetition of Belgian horrors in France. Five hundred French women raped, mutilated and murdered between August 30 and Sept. 10, 1914. Deportation into bondage in Germany of vast numbers of non-combatant men, women and children. Lusitania torpedoed; 1198 drowned. Poisoned wells in South West Africa; poisoned streets dropped by German airmen for French children to eat. Executions of Nurse Cavell, Capt. Fryatt and numerous Belgian officials and citizens. German introduction into warfare of poison gas, liquid fire, and bombbardment of undefended towns by land, sea and air.

Aerial bombing of hospitals and deliberate firing on the Red Cross flag, on land and sea; sinking of hospital ships with wounded on board; shelling Paris churches on Corpus Christi Day and killing 200 worshippers.

Crews of ships sunk by Hun submarines left to die in open boats; 41 of the crew of steamship Belgian Prince drowned on U-boat deck.

Countless barbarities in the field to British prisoners of war and further barbarities to prisoners in German prison camps.

Sinking of the Leinster, and the murder of Canadian nurses in the Llandovery Castle; killing of 1413 men, women and children by aeroplane and Zeppelin raids over Great Britain, of which there were 112, since 1914, with an injured list of 2,407, making a total of 4,820 casualties.

9,000,000 tons of British shipping sunk and some 4,600,000 of Allied and neutral tonnage.

The above do not comprise the whole of Germany's outrages, and in that list there are losses for which no monetary compensation would be adequate, and for which no reparation on Germany's part could make good. And yet there must be restitution and restoration. France will attend to that, no less than Britain and Belgium and Italy and Serbia. It is well that the conditions are in the hands of a Frenchman, and through him the just retribution of the Allies will fall upon the Prussian destroyer.

"Battles Royal." Here and There.

"Battles Royal Down North" is the title of one of the two volumes of the final stories of the late Norman Duncan, published by Fleming R. Revell Company, London, Edinburgh, New York and Chicago and on sale in this city by S. E. Garland. The volume which is very attractive in dark green and gold binding, contains five stories—"The Rose of Great Pric's," "The Long Arm," "The Last Lucter," "White Water" and "The Wreck of the Rough an' Tumble." Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell contributes an appreciation of the author, and there is also a short biographical article. Norman Duncan was the American writer who "discovered" Newfoundland, and there are very few of us who have not read his "Doctor Luke of the Labrador." His stories of Northern fish life are portrayed in naturally vivid colours. In the collection under review, which are essentially men's stories, the reader is carried from the ocean to the wilderness and the sea and the rigour of the North Atlantic, and there is a vigour and a thrust, particularly in "The Rose of Great Pric's" and "The Long Arm," which thrills, and the characters therein are strong and virile, with a goodly touch of the primitive. The struggles with frost and storm and sea are typical of those which the Newfoundlanders know through daily, while pursuing his calling, and the cruellest of the ice dogs, roaring of the gale, the swish of the blizzard and the singing of cordage are depicted in that nervous language which makes the whole collection an epic. One reviewer says—"If ever folk experienced in their daily lives the cruelty of the sea, the rigour of the pitiless frozen north it is these Labrador fishermen and trappers of the wild waters of the sea. The remaining three stories of this volume are every whit as interesting and powerful as the two named, and no library collection of Newfoundland literature is complete without this book."

Wedding Bells.

PELLEY-NORMORE. On the evening of October 26th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Seward Horton, Parkdale, New Glasgow, was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when Rev. B. J. Porter, Pastor of Trinity Methodist Church united in marriage Mr. Weldon Pelley, of New Glasgow, and Miss Beatrice Maude Normore, of Bell Island, Nfld. At the strains of the Wedding March, the bride entered the parlor leaning upon the arm of Mr. Horton. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Fred Pelley, and the bridesmaid who was gownned in blue silk, was Mrs. Fred Pelley. The bride, becoming robed in a suit of sage blue silk, carried a large bouquet of bridal roses, the groom's gift to the bride being an elegant wrist watch. After the ceremony the happy couple received the hearty felicitations of the large and interested bridal party, following which a dainty lunch was served. The large display of valuable presents evidenced the popularity of the young couple. Mr. Pelley is a master mechanic, and has been working with the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Co. for several years.—A.P.

An Appreciation.

We clip the following from the Halifax Herald of the 3rd instant:—"The Newfoundlanders are proud to know the fact that Captain Abraham Roan has been appointed a skipper in the Royal Naval Reserve. Captain Roan is well and favourably known to a large number of Nova Scotian mariners and they feel he will carry his new honours well."
