Great Turf Frauds.

PRINTING A PAPER FOR THE SAKE OF ONE ADVERTISEMENT.

Nothing in the curiosities of crime is more extraordinary than the case where a clever swindler printed a whole bogus newspaper for the express purpose of drawing the attention of "mugs" to one small advertisement in it.

Harwood, alias Benson, alias the Count de Montague, was an international crook, a "swell mobster." As the gallant count, he ruffed it on the Continent, swindling here, swindling there, till at last an unfortunate mistake led him to the inside of an English prison.

On release at the end of his sentence he naturally sought congenial company, and found it in the person of another rogue, Medway, alias Kerr. Mr. Kerr also had a certain reputation in the higher criminal circles. Fraudulent bookmaking was his speciality, with a distinct leaning towards Continental clients, who, naturally, didn't know with whom they were dealing, and couldn't trace him if they did.

The Bogus Bank.

On these happy terms the ingenious Mr. Kerr had instituted his "Royal Bank" with whose cheques he paid his lucky clients. It was true that there was no such bank, and that there was therefore no money. But the cheques looked admirable, and the very title inspired confidence.

It was at this juncture that the Kerr and Benson partnership began. When two clever rogues join forces, the trade of knavery gets busy. First the precious pair operated as Archer & Co. Then Archer & Co. disappeared, only to start again as an ingenious "Society for Insurance Against Losses on the Turf." This admirable and philanthropic scheme found a good deal of support, principally on the Continent.

"Sworn Bookmaker!"

The whole affair suggested respectability and confidence. The gang—there were two others in it—had a decorous office off the Strand; the nominal head of the "company" was "T. Allerton, Sworn Bookmaker."

Innocent French and Belgian backers were especially impressed by the "sworn bookmaker"—an invention of which Kerr was particularly proud—and money began to pour in.

At last the time seemed ripe for one final swindle on a big scale—to be the last.

An entire "newspaper" was printed, complete with editorial, leading articles, theatrical notices, and advertisements. It was numbered 1713, which gave the impression of a venerable and respectable age. Obviously one of the oldest established English papers!

Then the Bubble Burst.

Its entire object lay in the advertisement of a Mr. Montgomery, chartered bookmaker. So estimable was the character of this gentleman that the editor felt compelled to insert a tiny paragraph of official praise of his high personality, upright dealings, and prompt payments.

Testimony from such a source was high praise indeed.

"This 'paper' was sent abroad by the thousand. It attracted, amongst others, a Madame de Goncourt, an old French lady with a foolish taste for betting with strangers. From first to last, ten thousand pounds was what she contributed to the coffers of the worthy Montgomery.

Then the bubble burst. Friends of Madame began to make inquiries, and the firm thought it desirable to go abroad.

The police followed, and in Rotterdam the swindlers were arrested. So ended one of the most remarkable incidents of the world of roguery in modern times.—Pearson's Weekly.

Russia Imports Cotton.

RUSSIA—The Russian textile industry is just now passing through a crisis, in order to save 120,000 workmen from unemployment, the government has permitted the state cotton committee and the textile syndicate to import 2,000,000 pods or 35,000 tons of cotton, assigning for this purpose a six month's loan of 20,000,000 gold roubles. The new economic policy of the Soviet government has given rise to a number of combined state trusts in the textile industry, and many factories which have been idle for the last four years are now running. But the revolution ruined the cotton industry in Turkestan and the Caucasus, and no fresh supply of raw material was forthcoming. Thus the factories had to use up their small funds of cotton left over from pre-war days, but this, together with the expected harvest of this year, will hardly last them until next February. Working at the rate of one-fifth of the pre-war production, the requirements of the Russian textile industry for the next year is estimated at 4,600,000 pods of raw material for 1,600,000 spindles. This year's harvest of cotton is estimated at 7,000,000 pods, while the remainder of the amount necessary for production will have to be purchased abroad, chiefly in Bukhara, Persia and Khiva.
