"Printing Isn't Expensive If You Pay Enough For It"

The task which business stationery has to perform is to convey a message. That is its primary purpose. But it has another. It should convey an atmosphere—a personality—which identifies the business it represents, and it should convey that atmosphere or personality so convincingly, so pleasingly, so substantially, that it makes the same kind of favourable impression that a good salesman or a fine office does.

Business stationery which fails in this particular is too expensive to use, because it is not doing the whole job. That's why printing isn't expensive if you pay enough for it.

We have lately installed an embossing machine which produces beautiful glossy or dull relief work on plain type printing that defies actual die or plate embossing in appearance.

A trial order will convince you of its excellence.
