Mesmer and Teemer Each Win a Bace. MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 4.- A scullcontagious disease of the horse known as glanders in several parts of the country cannot fail to attract the attention of health officers, who ought to suppress it without delay. This disease is said to be caused by continuous bad treatment and by overcrowding in filthy and unventilated stables. It is fatal to human beings, to whom it can be communicated from horses, and on this account the disease, after its appearance in a stable, should be exterminated by the most vigorous measures.

A few days ago the state veterinarian of Illinois reported that glanders prevailed among horses in no less than 19 counties of that state. He had attempted to kill the diseased horses, but had been prevented from doing this by the owners' attorneys, who asserted that such scino acril the taken who asserted that such action could be taken only after the governor should issue a proclamation declaring glanders to be epidemic.
